Dear s.22(1)

Re: Request for Access to Records under the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act (the "Act")

I am responding to your request of April 5, 2017 for:

Copies of all documents, including e-mails, memos, briefing notes, media lines, Q&As, etc., regarding the proposal, planning and announcing of Vancouver's new Chief Resilience Officer on April 3, 2017 (<http://vancouver.sun.com/news/local-news/city-of-vancouver-appoints-first-chief-resilience-officer>).

All responsive records are attached. Some information in the records has been severed, (blacked out), under s.13(1) s.22(1) of the Act. You can read or download this section here: http://www.bclaws.ca/EPLibraries/bclaws_new/document/ID/freeside/96165_00

Under section 52 of the Act you may ask the Information & Privacy Commissioner to review any matter related to the City's response to your request. The Act allows you 30 business days from the date you receive this notice to request a review by writing to: Office of the Information & Privacy Commissioner, info@oipc.bc.ca or by phoning 250-387-5629.

If you request a review, please provide the Commissioner's office with: 1) the request number assigned to your request (#04-1000-20-2017-142); 2) a copy of this letter; 3) a copy of your original request for information sent to the City of Vancouver; and 4) detailed reasons or grounds on which you are seeking the review.

Please do not hesitate to contact the Freedom of Information Office at foi@vancouver.ca if you have any questions.

Yours truly,

City of Vancouver Launches Partnership with 100 Resilient Cities & Names City's First Chief Resilience Officer

VANCOUVER – Mayor Gregor Robertson along with representatives from 100 Resilient Cities - Pioneered by The Rockefeller Foundation (100RC) formally launched their partnership today and announced the appointment of Vancouver's first Chief Resilience Officer (CRO), Katie McPherson, who through the support of 100RC will lead the development of a citywide Resilience Strategy to ensure our residents, communities, institutions, businesses, and systems can persist, adapt, and grow no matter what kinds of chronic stresses and acute shocks Vancouver may experience.

The appointment of a Chief Resilience Officer is a core component of the 100RC program, and is funded by the organization through a grant to the city. As CRO, Katie will leverage resources and knowledge from 100RC, its partners, and other member cities to drive action to address the city's most pressing resilience challenges. Vancouver was named part of the 100RC network in 2016, joining cities such as London, New York, Bangkok and Buenos Aires – and was selected from more than 1,000 applicants from around the world. Other Canadian member cities include Calgary, Toronto and Montreal.

"We have always understood and valued the importance of partnerships in our work at the City," said Vancouver Mayor Gregor Robertson. "100RC offers an opportunity not only to connect and collaborate with other cities and global experts to explore and address some of our City's most complex challenges, but it also provides an opportunity to support, elevate and advance innovative solutions that are being created and led from within our neighbourhoods, by local businesses, residents and organizations."

"In an era of global uncertainty, climate change, and growing local pressures, this is an important opportunity for our city," said Vancouver CRO Katie McPherson. "Our people are our biggest asset, and we're looking forward to partnering with and learning from a broad range of stakeholders. This opportunity will allow us to elevate and share the incredible work already happening across our community, and to achieve big pieces of work that we can't do alone."

At a day-long workshop, over 80 of the brightest and most innovative minds from different backgrounds, experiences and expertise in Vancouver were brought together to discuss existing initiatives and identify opportunities that assess the social, cultural, environmental and economic systems that shape our city, and identify our collective resilience to the shocks and stresses Vancouver faces as a growing urban centre.

"Vancouver is part of a global movement of cities focused on building urban resilience," said Michael Berkowitz, President of 100 Resilient Cities. "The launch of the city's resilience agenda at today's workshop, along with the appointment of Katie McPherson as Chief Resilience Officer, will provide the City of Vancouver with a starting point to clarify the city's needs, surface innovative thinking, and give us a blueprint to bring Vancouver the tools and resources needed to become more resilient."

Each city in the 100RC network receives four concrete types of support:

- Financial and logistical guidance for establishing an innovative new position in city government, a Chief Resilience Officer, who will lead the city's resilience efforts;
- Technical support for development of a robust Resilience Strategy;
- Access to solutions, service providers, and partners from the private, public and NGO sectors who can help them develop and implement their Resilience Strategies; and
- Membership in a global network of member cities who can learn from and help each other.

Through the 100RC program, Vancouver will have access to a carefully curated suite of nearly 100 platform partners, providing expertise in a wide range of areas that includes diagnostic analysis, risk and hazard assessment, climate change, financial analysis, data management, resource and energy use, and social services and development. These and other services are available to support resilience priorities in our city, including fast tracking actions laid out across existing strategies, and in support of local partners and organizations leading efforts that contribute to urban resilience here in Vancouver.

Thanks Jag. I spoke with Frances – I think it went fine. She was interested in the types of issues Katie will be focused on, where the role reports in the organization, how will Katie make headway as a single-person function, why we elected to hire Katie (as compared to some of the very high-profile folks that other cities have hired as CROs).

Let me know if you need any detail on any of the above.

Hi Paul,

We have a couple media requests regarding the Chief Resilience Officer.

Can you please call the following:

Frances Bula (604-812-6205) – She s on a CBC panel tonight talking about this appointment so she has some questions. She s available for 1pm.

Mike Howell (604-630-3545) – Wants confirmation on whether the city is getting, or has received, $1 million from 100 Resilient Cities (Rockefeller Foundation). Also wants to know CRO s salary and if Katie s former position will be backfilled by another employee or a new hire.

 Subject: Questions About New Resilience Officer Position

Hey there,

My name is Ethan Sawyer and I'm a producer for CBC Vancouver's local TV news. Wanted to touch base because I have a few follow-up questions to yesterdays announcement regarding the new Resilience Officer position.

- 1) I understand one of McPherson's main priorities is to create a holistic strategy, not just for shocks and disasters, but on-going problems like homelessness. How exactly is she going to do this? What will her day to day look like?
- 2) What does the city say to residents concerned with seeing a private entity funding a public position?
- 3) What is the city's obligation to follow 100RC's guidance on these issues?

Thanks for that catch, Sadhu.

To confirm, the title is ok; it is the acronym that is problematic given the fact that we already have a CRO (chief risk officer). So long as we use the full title, that will avoid any confusion.

I don't have any other suggestions regarding the messaging.

Cheers,
Paul

Subject: Re: Questions About New Resilience Officer Position

Hey Dhaneva,

Thanks for getting back to me - and apologies for my own late reply! I was out of office yesterday.

Wondering if we could set up an interview for today's show with either Katie MacPherson or Mayor Robertson (if he's available)? They'd be chatting with host Dan Burritt about the new role and what it entails etc.

Hi Ethan,

My apologies for getting this to you so late. I've provided some background information for you. Please let me know if you need anything else. If you need a quote from our Chief Resilience Officer, I would be happy to get you one.

1. I understand one of McPherson's main priorities is to create a holistic strategy, not just for shocks and disasters, but on-going problems like homelessness. How exactly is she going to do this? What will her day to day look like?

- The chief resilience officer will lead a strategy development process that starts with an analysis of the status of current initiatives that contribute to urban resilience, and the identification and prioritization of areas and issues that present the greatest opportunity for our citizens and business to leverage the resources from 100RC towards a positive, healthy, and sustainable future.

- This will not include solving all the cities biggest problems, but it will include understanding the complex systemic challenges that we face, and identifying the areas where innovative solutions can support our community to cope and thrive despite these stressors.

- This includes broad multi-stakeholder engagement to develop a shared understanding of community priorities, and highlight work that is ongoing in the private sector, in neighbourhoods, and in organizations across the city.

- The Agenda Setting Workshop was the first step in seeking community input on the state of these issues, and, when Katie officially begins the role in May, a next step will include deeper follow up and engagement across a wide range of sectors.
- The City of Vancouver will be seeking partners to drive this work across multiple sectors, and anticipate the establishment of a steering committee and working groups representative of a range of local experts and leaders that will be key to the implementation of the strategy.
- This assessment process sets the foundation for strategy development in Phase 2.
- Throughout this process, the city of Vancouver will have support, through 100RC, to a suite of Platform Partners, providing pro-bono services and expertise targeting our priority areas. In addition, the CRO will be a liaison to the network of member cities, and be a conduit to foster connections and knowledge sharing between the people and partners that will lead this work in Vancouver, and those tackling similar issues in other member cities.
- The CRO's day-to-day will vary widely. It will include a significant amount of time working in and with community partners, as well as a commitment to share information and knowledge across the 100RC network.
- Through this strategy, the City of Vancouver aims to elevate and amplify work and solutions from within community, and to support locally driven initiatives by providing access to the resources offered by the 100RC program.
- Over the course of 3 years, 100RC has adapted and refined the tools used to support cities and communities in undertaking this complex assessment process, we will leverage these tools, and also expect to adapt them to incorporate local knowledge and to fit Vancouver's unique needs.

2. Over 60 other cities around the world have preceded Vancouver in this process, and the analysis has resulted in a wide range of priorities, ranging from....(provide some examples for context?) What does the city say to residents concerned with seeing a private entity funding a public position?

- The city of Vancouver joins 100 other global cities in this initiative, including 3 other Canadian Cities.
- We recognize that the long term well being of our city relies on collaboration and cooperation between a wide range of partners.

- Vancouver has benefited in the past from membership in other networks, and from funding derived from a wide range of sources.
- The funding provided through 100RC for this position offers access to resources and the ability to connect our citizens with solutions that would otherwise not be available.
- We have carefully considered the requirements of the grant, and have discussed and learned from a number of cities that have preceded Vancouver in the process, to ensure that the program will be of benefit to our community.

3. What is the city's obligation to follow 100RC's guidance on these issues?

- Local ownership is critical to the successful implementation of any strategy. The 100RC program provides a methodology and framework to support cities to assess resilience and develop a holistic strategy, but the priorities and actions that make-up the strategy are set by the city that owns it.
- Urban resilience is an emerging concept, and the process and tools provided by 100RC continue to adapt and change with every city that uses them. Vancouver can consider the guidance and expertise from 100RC, and from other member cities, but will prioritize local perspectives and input.
- One of 100RC's objectives is to provide a platform to scale up locally-led solutions for application across global cities. To this end, Vancouver will also provide guidance and contributions based on our own unique experience.

Hi all –

Here is the current list from Eventbrite. In addition to this are ~20 City staff, our First Nations welcomer and panel (named on the attached agenda) and the 100 Resilient Cities staff.

Please let me know if you need anything else.

Hey!

Can one of you guys send Katie the workshop participant list? She's drafting the Mayors speaking notes and wants to know if there's anyone on there he should acknowledge.

TIA.

Yes this is helpful. I'll ask Sadhu to put this on the agenda for today's meeting with the Mayor – he'll want an update and may have some ideas on it

Thanks Kevin. This session is a standard agenda that 100 RC has developed to launch the initiative in each city. The general intent is to introduce the resilience concept and have a preliminary discussion about Vancouver's primary resilience challenges as input to our strategy development work going forward. We are configuring the standard agenda somewhat to ensure it works for us.

As it happens, we expect that we will also be in a position to introduce our Chief Resilience Officer at the meeting.

I hope the foregoing information is helpful. I can also resend the draft agenda for the session if that would be useful.

Cheers,
Paul

Hi Kevin,

I am writing to follow up on our very brief conversation re the launch event for the 100 RC program. Given travel, I am guessing you have not had a chance to look at the agenda outline and proposed invitee list. Do you expect you might have an opportunity to do so within the coming days? The event is scheduled for April 4 so our staff team are keen to get the invitations out.

Many thanks for your help on this and please let me know if you need any additional information.

News Release

City of Vancouver Launches Partnership with 100 Resilient Cities & Names City's First Chief Resilience Officer

VANCOUVER - Mayor Gregor Robertson along with representatives from 100 Resilient Cities - Pioneered by The Rockefeller Foundation (100RC) formally launched their partnership today and announced the appointment of Vancouver's first Chief Resilience Officer (CRO), Katie McPherson, who through the support of 100RC will lead the development of a citywide Resilience Strategy to ensure our residents, communities, institutions, businesses, and systems to survive, adapt, and grow no matter what kinds of chronic stresses and acute shocks Vancouver may experience

The appointment of a Chief Resilience Officer is a core component of the 100RC program, and is funded by the organization through a grant to the city. As CRO, Katie will leverage resources and knowledge from 100RC, its partners, and other member cities to drive action to address the city's most pressing resilience challenges. Vancouver was named part of the 100RC network in 2016, joining cities such as London, New York, Bangkok and Buenos Aires - and was selected from more than 1,000 applicants from around the world. Other Canadian member cities include Calgary, Toronto and Montreal.

"We have always understood and valued the importance of partnerships in our work at the City," said Vancouver Mayor Gregor Robertson. "100RC offers an opportunity not only to connect and collaborate with other cities and global experts to explore and address some of our City's most complex challenges, but it also provides an opportunity to support, elevate and advance innovative solutions that are being created and led from within our neighbourhoods, by local businesses, residents and organizations."

“In an era of global uncertainty, climate change, and growing local pressures, this is an important opportunity for our city,” said Vancouver CRO Katie McPherson. “Our people are our biggest asset, and we’re looking forward to partnering with and learning from a broad range of stakeholders. The opportunity will allow us to elevate and share the incredible work already happening across our community, and to achieve big pieces of work that we couldn’t do alone.

At a day-long workshop, over 80 of the brightest and most innovative minds from different backgrounds, experiences and expertise in Vancouver were brought together to discuss existing initiatives and identify opportunities that assess the social, cultural, environmental and economic systems that shape our city, and identify our collective resilience to the shocks and stresses Vancouver faces as a growing urban centre.

“Vancouver is part of a global movement of cities focused on building urban resilience,” said Otis Rolley, 100RC Regional Director for North America. “The launch of the city’s resilience agenda at today’s workshop, along with the appointment of Katie McPherson as Chief Resilience Officer, will provide the City of Vancouver with a starting point to clarify the city’s needs, surface innovative thinking, and give us a blueprint to bring Vancouver the tools and resources needed to become more resilient.”

Each city in the 100RC network receives four concrete types of support:

- Financial and logistical guidance for establishing an innovative new position in city government, a Chief Resilience Officer, who will lead the city’s resilience efforts;
- Technical support for development of a robust Resilience Strategy;
- Access to solutions, service providers, and partners from the private, public and NGO sectors who can help them develop and implement their Resilience Strategies; and
- Membership in a global network of member cities who can learn from and help each other.

Through the 100RC program, Vancouver will have access to a carefully curated suite of nearly 100 platform partners, providing expertise in a wide range of areas that includes diagnostic analysis, risk and hazard assessment, climate change, financial analysis, data management, resource and energy use, and social services and development. These and other services are available to support resilience priorities in our city, including to fast track actions laid out across existing strategies, and in support of local partners and organizations leading efforts that contribute to urban resilience here in Vancouver.

Workshop remarks:

- Thank participants + 100RC
- Acknowledge unceded territory of the MST
- 100RC partnership timely
- Big challenges:
 - o population growth + immigration
 - o shifting economy
 - o climate change
 - o housing crisis, health, lack of connection, etc.
- 100RC = connect globally + locally, tackle challenges together
- Vancouver has foundation for resilience, but we still have a lot of work ahead of us
- Looking forward to workshop outcomes + partnership for resilience

Media event remarks:

- Thanks Jeb, acknowledge MST
- Proud to be named in 100RC
- Vancouver = head start as adaptive city
- Heart of resilience is community + partnerships
- Better position to tackle big challenges
- Core component of 100RC is a CRO to lead the charge
- Introduce Katie
 - o Katie has been with the City's Office of Emergency Management for 5 years and recently led the implementation of a new Community Resilience portfolio.
 - o Prior to that, she was the Manager of Emergency Planning, where she developed new opportunities for citizens, businesses, and volunteers to engage in community emergency preparedness.
 - o She also led a regional risk assessment for oil spills, engaged a wide range of inter-agency partners to assess risk and develop plans for emergency response and recovery.

- o She is a natural born leader and demonstrated her leadership as part of the team that responded to the 2015 Marathassa Oil Spill, the 2015 container fire at the Port of Vancouver, and the 2013 Calgary Flood.
- o In addition to her roles at the City, Katie has a wealth of unique experience in the private and non-profit sectors building resiliency.
- o Prior to her work with the City, she led an award-winning, multi-disciplinary climate adaptation project in North west BC;
- o She has also served as an emergency social services volunteer with the Red Cross and the City of Vancouver
- o Her passion for resilience is rooted in her experiences as a volunteer during response and recovery to the 2004 tsunami in Thailand, where she worked with community members to support a successful grassroots recovery project providing employment for local citizens and resulted in the construction of an art centre for local youth.
- o Katie will be responsible for continuing to collaborate and work with you, 100RC and other partners to identify and build our future resilience strategy.

Hi Tobin,
Matt Robinson forwarded your note to me.
I'd be happy to receive and publish a letter to the editor that rebuts the letter from Bob McCance.
You can send it to my email so it doesn't get lost in the sunletters inbox.
Thanks,

Hi Matt,

I know this isn't your bag but who I can reach out to about this letter – it is totally inaccurate and I am surprised that the Sun would print this as it is spreading incorrect information.

Vancouver's newly appointed Chief Resilience Officer Katie McPherson. Arlen Redekop / PNG

Re: We can make this city stand the test of time, April 4

And I thought only university professors could babble endlessly, saying absolutely nothing.

Vancouver taxpayers are now funding a Chief Resilience Officer and likely a department to command. They will save us from earthquakes, drought, snowstorms, unaffordability, and a million other "chronic stresses and acute shocks". Where do people like Gregor Robertson and Michael Berkowitz come from? Or better yet, to which planet can we send them? We desperately need a civic election.

Bob McCance, Vancouver

Can I get this person's email so that I can respond directly to him to let him know that Vancouver Taxpayers are not paying a single cent for anything related to the CRO.

Or would the Sun post some sort of clarification under the letter?

Thanks for your help,
Tobin
