SUBJECT: Economic Impact of COVID-19 – Bi-Monthly Labour Force Data: September 2021

Highlights: Monthly Labour Force Survey Data, September 2021

- Employment in Vancouver decreased from 1,520,000 in June to 1,518,300 in September for a loss of 1,700 (0.1%) jobs
- The unemployment rate decreased by 1.2 percentage points to 6.0% in Vancouver between June and September
- Nationally, the unemployment rate decreased by 0.9 percentage points, to 6.9%.
- Cumulatively, employment in the region has increased by 29,900 (2.0%) since February 2020
- Regular Council reporting on regional employment trends was initiated at the onset of the pandemic. Issuance of this memo will be ended after the January 2022 issue and staff will continue to monitor and report back to Council as needed.

This memo highlights Labour Force Survey (LFS) data published by Statistics Canada for the reference weeks from June to September 2021. The LFS provides estimates for the unemployment rate and employment totals by industry and occupation on a monthly basis. The information presented in these memos illustrates the impact of COVID-19 on Vancouver's labour force and economy over the most recent 3-month period since the Pandemic began. This information is meant to be viewed in conjunction with other socio-economic and community statistics to form a cohesive picture of the City's current state and assist with recovery and resilience planning. This information will be posted to the City website and shared with the business community.

Important notes about the data

The statistics presented in this memo are for the Metro Vancouver region as the Census Metropolitan Area (CMA) is the smallest geography level available for LFS data tables published by Statistics Canada. Throughout this memo, the term “Vancouver” refers to the Vancouver CMA. The LFS data used to create the statistics presented in this report are not seasonally adjusted¹.

Changes in employment totals and unemployment rate

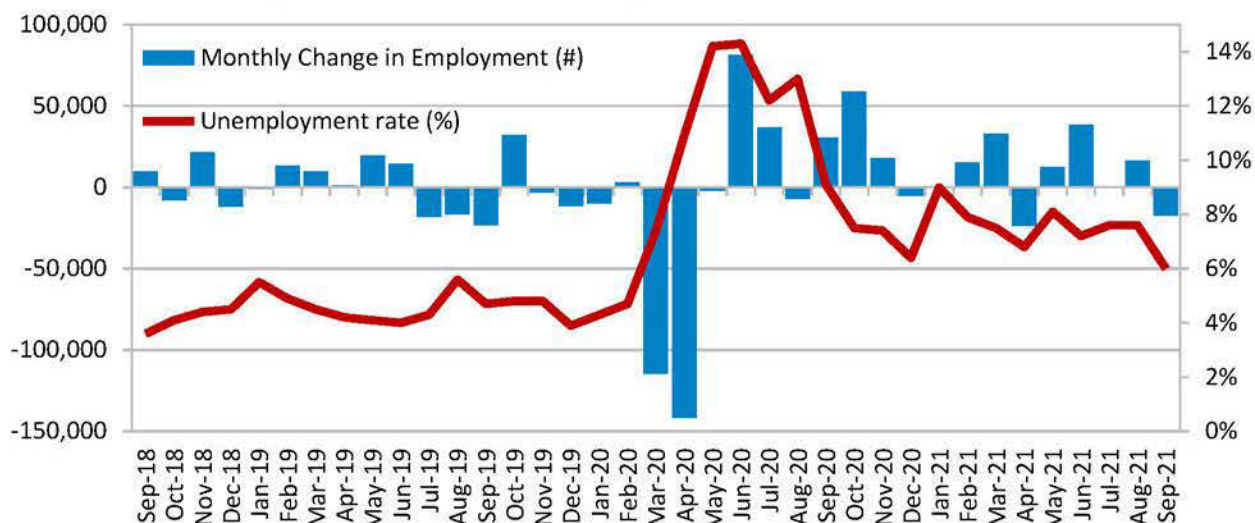

Employment in Vancouver decreased from 1,520,000 in June to 1,518,300 in September for a loss of 1,700 (0.1%) jobs. Between June and September, the unemployment rate decreased by 1.2 percentage points to 6.0% in Vancouver. In September 2021, the region had 29,900 (2.0%) more employed workers than in February 2020. This slight increase shows employment numbers have returned to pre-pandemic levels of February 2020. The peak of losses of 251,200 (-17.2%) employed workers was recorded between February and April 2020. Nationally, the unemployment rate decreased by 0.9 percentage points between June and September 2021 to 6.9%.

The fluctuations in employment levels from March 2020 to September 2021 reflects changes to public health restrictions and other measures, including increased limitations on some businesses under “circuit breaker” restrictions in late March 2021 followed by the gradual easing of some provincial restrictions May 25th and June 15th, 2021. The province moved to Step 3 of the Restart Plan June 30, 2021, relaxing a number of major orders related to the COVID-19 pandemic preceding the reference weeks in July and August (July 11th to July 17th, 2021 and August 15th to August 21st, 2021). Subsequently, on September 13th, during the Census reference week (September 12th to September 18th, 2021), the province introduced proof of vaccination at most indoor public spaces. Please see Figure 7 for a full list of announcements and orders made since the previous reference period. Appendix A shows all prior announcements and orders starting on March 12, 2020. The next labour force survey memo will be distributed in January 2022 and will include new data for October, November, and December.

As the statistics have shown a sustained return of overall employment to pre-pandemic levels, PDS will suspend further issuance of these memos after the next issue in January of 2022. Staff will continue to monitor economic conditions and will report back to Council as needed.

Additional Data Sources: Employment Lands and Economy Review

The Employment Lands and Economy Review team has also prepared 30 fact sheets using a variety of data sources detailing the economic structure of the city of Vancouver and the role of the city within the regional economy. These fact sheets are available on the City's website here: <https://vancouver.ca/employment-lands>.

City of Vancouver business support webpage

On Friday, April 3rd, 2020, City staff established the COVID-19 Business Communications and Support Office (BCSO) to assist local businesses at this critical time. The office is a single point of contact for Vancouver's local business owners to get information from the City of Vancouver regarding business support programs, to learn what City-run business services are currently available, and to make suggestions to the City concerning business and the economy. The webpage is available here: <https://vancouver.ca/home-property-development/covid-19-coronavirus-support-for-local-businesses.aspx>.

Staff in the City-Wide & Regional Planning division of the Planning, Urban Design and Sustainability department are supporting the BCSO, ensuring that information for business remains current and accessible, responding directly to questions by e-mail as well as assisting with developing resources for responding to concerns raised by local business operators.
