

I'm thrilled that the team at CEDaR (Community Engaged Documentation and Research) at UBC has gone even further with the City Poems Project to develop a geolocative app that will enrich people's understanding of the vibrant tapestry of histories and communities that have shaped the territories currently known as British Columbia.

I was very fortunate to work with supportive and helpful staff from the key institutional partners that oversee the Vancouver poet laureate position: the City of Vancouver, the Vancouver Public Library and the Vancouver Writers' Festival. It's important to note that the poet laureate position exists in this city because of the vision of philanthropist Dr. Yosef Wosk who set up an endowment fund through the Vancouver Foundation.

Finally, I want to thank all those who submitted poems to the Stage One contest, as well as the poets and post-secondary students who worked together to create poetry videos both during and after the official contest. I hope that the City Poems Project has served as a creative launching pad for everyone involved. May the seeds of poetic inspiration find fertile soil wherever they land.

Fiona Tinwei Lam

September 2024

Stage 1

Stage One of the City Poems Project was held from January to June 2022 to generate new site-based poems across the City. On January 16, 2022, the Vancouver-themed poetry contest was launched with an online reading and panel discussion about writing place-based poems. Hosted by the Vancouver Public Library and moderated by the Vancouver Poet Laureate, the event featured local poets Joanne Arnott, Junie Desil, Kevin Spenst, Evelyn Lau, and Alex Leslie. Posters were disseminated to local high schools, community centres, seniors' centres and neighbourhood houses. Besides being invited to high schools where she talked about the contest, the Poet Laureate also held a free, online "Crafting Poems about Place" workshop through the Vancouver Public Library, an online place-based poetry workshop in collaboration with Heritage Vancouver, and a hybrid live and online workshop at Historic Joy Kogawa House. A live workshop facilitated by the Vancouver Poet Laureate was also held at Vancouver's historic Mountain View Cemetery in partnership with Pandora's Writing Collective.

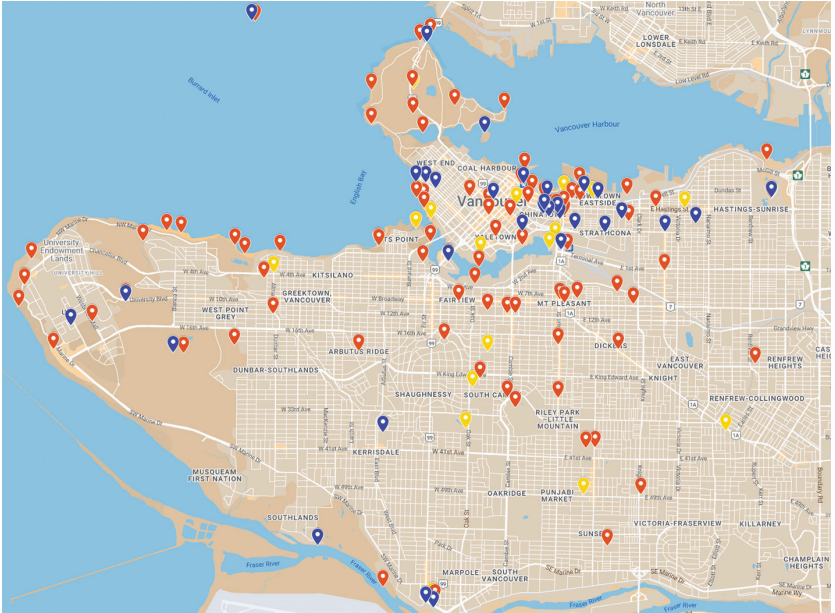

YouTube: Online reading and panel discussion

Of the over 250 poems submitted for the contest by youth, emerging poets and established poets about historical, cultural or ecological sites within the City of Vancouver, 27 (10 Youth, 10 Emerging, 7 Established) were chosen as finalists by three judges: Dr. Bonnie Nish, David Ly, and Rachel Rose. There were cash prizes for the top three winners in each category, as well as donated poetry anthologies from the Griffin Foundation and exhibition catalogues from the Museum of Vancouver.

Judges biographies

Vancouver City Poems 2022-2024

This map shows the locations referred to by the place-based poems submitted by participating poets. Poems by established poets are in yellow, poems by emerging poets are in red, and poems by youth poets are in blue.

Vancouver City Poems 2022-2024

Eric Hamber Secondary, Grade 11 Creative Writing

Windermere Secondary School, Grade 10 Social Studies

Tecumseh Elementary School, Grade 7

Magee Secondary, Grade 11 English Literature

Downtown Eastside Writers Collective, Carnegie Centre

Reading at Dr. Sun Yat-Sen Classical Chinese Garden.

VANCOUVER POET LAUREATE'S CITY POEMS CONTEST

CALL FOR ENTRIES

JANUARY 16 - APRIL 15 2022

What historical, cultural or ecological sites in Vancouver intrigue, fascinate or inspire you? Is it the ancient Musqueam village of Essən7əm, or the Indigenous village of Šəwákw where Kitsilano and False Creek are now, skwtstəs7s or Deadman's Island, Hastings Park where Japanese Canadians were interned during WWII, a historic building in Chinatown or Davie Village, Hogan's Alley, Coal Harbour where the Komagata Maru lay at anchor for 3 months in 1914, or one of Vancouver's gardens, hidden streams or remaining old growth trees? Here's your chance to write a poem that will provide a greater understanding of the origins and multi-layered history of the place we now know as Vancouver!

RULES

1. The poem must be original and unpublished.
2. Poems MUST relate in a significant way to a historical, cultural or ecological site within the area presently known as the City of Vancouver or the UBC Endowment Lands and provide a greater understanding of the origins and multi-layered history of the place we now know as Vancouver. (Poems about sites outside this area unfortunately will not be eligible.)
3. Word limit: up to 400 words per poem. Spoken word poetry: up to 3 minutes.
4. Maximum of two poems per poet.
5. Poems must be typed, 12 point font in Times New Roman or similar font. For spoken word poems, submit a print version plus MP4 recording.
6. A submission form located at <https://www.vpl.ca/poetlaureate> must accompany each submitted poem.
7. Submissions will only be received between January 16 - April 15, 2022.

Street Map from 1909 showing Fairview, City of Vancouver Archives LE03340. Image from Vancouver Heritage Foundation at www.vancouverheritagefoundation.org.

ELIGIBILITY

Three categories for contest entries: Youth (grade 12 or under) Adults (who have not published a book)
Adults (who have already published one or more books)

AWARDS

First Prize for each category: $300
Second Prize for each category: $200
Third Prize for each category: $100

Vancouver Writers Fest will also publish winning entries in their newsletter circulated to 14,000 readers. Winners will be announced in June 2022.

For more information, please email:

citypoemscontest@gmail.com

Winning poems

ESTABLISHED POETS

VPL Award Ceremony, June 11, 2022: Rachel Rose presenting Established shortlist.

Señákw

Susan Alexander

Three-kite man dazzles the afternoon sky:
thrust and zoom, synchronized twirl.
A slow bicycle booms out “Angel of the Morning.”
Kites as angels, as warriors, as flags,
as long-tailed birds, red and blue and white, theatrical as pennants of the tents further off.

Three-kite man pulls strings, and we watch his sails lift and kiss, then loop in all directions like calligraphy, figure skaters, sea creatures.
*They'll be no strings to bind your hands
if my love can't bind your heart.*
Scene complete, the master drags air to earth.

Obedient kites land in line, upright and quiet.
Spectators clap while yachts motor by.
Parades of joggers and dogs. Picnickers, Seigel's bagels loaded with smoked meat or lox, look for spots unsullied by Canada geese.
What year did the Bard disperse its queues?

Aristophanes understood the power of withholding.
Lysistrata has lovers and generals falling like dominos.
The actors step out of character to talk of Señákw:
the land under our settler feet, of families marched to a barge in 1913, and set adrift, a captive audience forced to watch their village torched.

Susan Alexander is the author of two collections of poems, Nothing You Can Carry and The Dance Floor Tilts, from Thistledown Press. Her poems have appeared in anthologies and literary magazines in Canada, the U.K. and the U.S. She lives on Nexwlélexm/ Bowen Island, B.C., the unceded territory of the Squamish people.

Vancouver City Poems 2022-2024

In the gap, the sky turns mauve above transplanted maples.
Ice cream treats are failsafe, upwind from the Jiffy Johns.
Women were licentious and weak to Ancient Greeks.
Just touch my cheek before you leave me, baby.
Lysistrata reframes a tale, takes a stand to stop her city's war with the weapons she has.

It's a mercy a tug spotted the castaways and towed
the village barge across the Narrows to their neighbours.
What is the thing that binds the heart? Vancouver city fathers didn't need to fly a kite to test citizen opinion on pillaged land. Even when they do, someone is always holding the strings.

The Modest Contribution of Babies to the Protest at the Member of Parliament's Office

Leslie Timmins

Wordless in their bundles, buckled to breast or back, their faces original and invariably round as their eyes stare out at our motley assembly, waving our signs at drivers turning the corner, Arbutus at Broadway, as we wait for the Member of Parliament to show up.

Just down the hill at Khatsahlano beach, we've all seen the mussels in their thousands curled against each other, blue-stone shells forced open by blast-furnace heat, and star fish splayed, dried-out and barnacles still encrusted, but dead from the drain of the sea from the reefs in the scorch of mid-day, an intertidal genocide.

You move over to stand with two schoolgirls at the curb holding identical signs—STOP Fossil Fuel Subsidies NOW!
and join in their laughter when they hoot and cheer
as a woman in a tin-coloured Corolla pounds her horn, beams at them, a funny look on her face,
a complicated sort of joy, like seeing a falling star—

“There is hope,” Kafka said, “but not for us.”

You glance at one of the organizers still on her phone, no word yet.

Leslie Timmins is the author of Every Shameless Ray, a collection of poems. Her writing appears in publications in Canada, the United States and United Kingdom. As an activist and editor, she volunteers with WRAP to advocate for new refugees to Canada.

Over our white or blue pandemic masks, we look round at each other, smile with our eyes, shake our heads at someone's story about city folks buying up island land, bolt-holes, someone says, refuge from the wildfires burning in the east, smoke and poisons blowing-in, and you wonder Where will I run? with your beloved, dear friends, good neighbours, Where will we go?

The young parents have stepped closer to the thin margin of shade beside the building, their infants now milk-or heat-dazed, lulled to sleep on a father's chest or held up by a mother to catch a non-existent breeze, a silent Greek chorus of irresistible tenderness, as you look again at the impossibly new soft skin of the impossibly young children, a plenitude of the minimum as Jimenez wrote, that fills the world.

What was it the old monks chanted in their medieval stone halls—standing all together as they asked What are we here for?
and their answer, Propter chorum,
for the sake of the chorus, as we wait for the Member of Parliament to show up.

To the Otter Who Snuck into the Dr. Sun Yat-Sen Garden and Ate the Koi

Kelsey Andrews

I'm told there are pictures of you on Facebook scuttering through Chinatown like a long rat, tourists happy to see a little nature.

I don't have a phone for Facebook and I never saw you as I ghosted those same streets, invisible.

On stony beaches
where rich people are housed, otters live under docks and smell terrible, musk and rotting fish.
I wonder, do they roll in the mess like dogs, silver spangles adhering to their fur?

In the Garden, your concrete-bruised paws were soothed by moss and mud.
All those koi caged in a stream that didn't go anywhere.

I too was feral
but am caged now in luxury, an SRO inspected periodically for bedbugs.

The Park Board tried to catch you but you winkled the fish from their live traps and laughed at them, while I must be polite to the social worker who scrunches up her nose

Kelsey Andrews
grew up in the country near Grande Prairie in Northern Alberta,
then moved to Vancouver, and lives now in Saanichton, Vancouver Island,
on WSANEC territory. Her first book of poetry, Big Sky Falling, came out in November of 2021 with Ronsdale Press.

when I get too near.

Buttons sold to the crowd were printed “Team Otter” or “Team Koi”.
One you ate was fifty.
You tore the liver, the fatty bits from the bright stomach, left the rest.

Meanwhile they’re trying to tame me, medicate me well enough to get some kind of job, stop winking money from Disability.

You disappeared one day.
No one saw you leave.

Stanley Park Fir

Julie Emerson

Aiming up, so far above you, we are in the sky, loving light, we align leaves precisely for sun, aspire to be one evergrowing swirl
galaxy of green,
arms up spiraling,
cumulus tickling,
ant-flavoured needles,
secret undersides:
narrow stripes of white,
our reserve of light in the rain forest.

We are your mothers.

Eagles understand how to be a friend of wind, we're dancing, risking death—a storm?
we ride it. Each mouse gets a shaggy cone,
each squirrel its seeds.

We are your mothers.

Raccoons and humans – could they be conscious?

Not only rootless, unaware of roots
right below their feet.

We are your mothers.

Close to our lovers,
those cedars you carve, amid splashy ferns horsetail cavorts here in season, we trees

Writer and artist Julie Emerson's books include
Twenty Seven Stings, The Herons of Stanley Park, and the illustrated novel,
A Hundred Days: A Botanical Novel. Her haiku have won the Vancouver Cherry Blossom Festival contest and been anthologized.

have had centuries.
We accumulate the honour of age from thin supple skin to thick reptilian.
Groins itching with voles, sap-sucking aphids, carbuncles, bruises,
when the crown teases lightning we drop limbs,
live in cambium.
A scarf of soft moss for cold, resinous icicles glisten
on clingy lichen.
We are your mothers.
Distant skyscrapers transparent cells, tall rigid forms will fall,
put a plant on top.
So you want to walk inside on wood; talk about afterlife.
We are your mothers.

Atmospheric River

Evelyn Lau

After, you would join others at the beach, greedy for a glimpse of wreckage—barge slammed against seawall, containers like a copper fort bricked against sky.
Scrawl of flip-flops, kelp lacing the bike path.
A fishing vessel propped against rocks, deck at right angles to the shoreline, split open.

On TV, Merritt slept under a skim of coffee-brown floodwater—
a city submerged, tops of trees and roofs tickling the rippled surface. A month of rain in two days, and farms in Abbotsford morphed into private islands on a vast inland lake, livestock paddling through cranberry bogs. Zigzagged cars strewn across the Coquihalla, a medley of tree trunks and metal, mummified in mud.

During the storm you were on the bridge, forcing your body against the wind like a mountaineer.
Savage sounds of banners snapping,
signs and awnings cracking, safety glass imploding.
Decades ago, you stood on this summit shredding sheet after sheet of paper into the night ocean, groping for courage to follow their ghostly descent. Now you cling to life like any stubborn old thing, clawing your way across—headlights surging on one side, swallowing sea on the other. The atmospheric river breaching the banks of sky, swamping the horizon.

Evelyn Lau
is a lifelong Vancouverite and award-winning writer who has published fourteen books, including nine volumes of poetry.

Congregation Beth Israel, Oak Street 1955

Barbara Pelman

Barbara Pelman was born in Vancouver and now lives in Victoria, B.C. She is active in the literary community in the city, assisting at Planet Earth Poetry. She has published four books of poetry and one chapbook.

Every High Holidays we congregated on the stairs, each of us in our new outfits, crinolines scratching our legs. Who had the starchiest?
Whose new shoes the shiniest? Certainly not mine. I stood on the edges of the crowd, in my cotton dress, limp crinoline, partially polished shoes. This was 1955,
I was twelve, when things like that mattered.

The synagogue brand-new then, another sacred space for the Jewish congregants, so soon after the war.
Built in 1948, the pride of the Jewish community,
for those who wanted to sit beside their wives,
the wives refusing to sit in the balcony like their immigrant mothers did, separate.
They wanted equality, in this country they had been born into, not like their parents who fled the pogroms in Russia, in Poland—arriving in Vancouver with their passports and not much else. Now their fathers swayed under their prayer shawls in the other synagogue down the road, their mothers in the balconies, looking on.

Beth Israel, with its fortified walls, its stained glass windows, its majestic staircase where we lingered, waiting for the service to begin. Rosh Hashana, and I am twelve. My dress was never velvet, or silk, or wool, my shoes never from Ingledew's or Eatons.

But I was the Choir Leader's daughter and could sit up in the choir-loft looking down on all of the congregants.
I could peek through the latticed walls and listen to my father's voice soaring over the others, his high tenor like the Angel Gabriel, or so I thought.
I could even look down on the Rabbi,
with his white kittel, his white kippah,
and pretend to listen to his sermon.

Everyone I knew sat in those seats, the polished pews, the raised bimah
in front of us, where the Rabbi and Cantor sat.
We gathered at Friday services, where my father came down onto the bimah
to raise the Kiddush cup, bless the wine.
We met at bar mitzvahs, morning services, lingered over sandwiches and tea, after.
The Rabbi inquired about our health, asked about our lessons. Were we preparing for our own bat mitzvahs? A new tradition, the world opening up for women.

Beth Israel, so different now, renovated in 1993, its grand staircase gone, the choir loft gone, my father's voice an echo in my mind. Hashkivenu
he sang, let us lie down in peace.

Fat Vancouver Snow

Diane Tucker

for Sheila and Carmen Rosen

In Norquay Park a man sits smoothing a snow fort, a graceful, C-shaped wall of white.

All around him he's greened the winter ground, though fists of fat snow keep falling, falling.

When it hits plus-2 degrees, even the snowflakes huddle together for life, become pom poms of snow, loose knots of snow, snow eggs breaking on the man next to me at the intersection, filling his afro with pearls, black and silver.

Up the hill swim sculptures of giant salmon slipping in and out of the sidewalk—how name them, these salmon refusing burial? How in Squamish Snichim say “Salmon with a Mouth Full of Snow”?

Vancouver native
Diane Tucker
has published a young adult novel and four books of poems, most recently Nostalgia for Moving Parts (Turnstone Press, 2021).
Her poems have been published in numerous anthologies and in more than seventy journals in Canada and abroad. She lives in beloved East Van.

Winning poems

EMERGING POETS

VPL Award Ceremony, June 11, 2022: Fiona Lam presenting Emerging shortlist on behalf of David Ly

Entertainment

Jeremy Chu

For the Marco Polo Restaurant

Language begins at the crunch of siu yuk, its rugged hide, and continues through the rhythm of laughter, the blues of evening vapor among brass horns hoisting the dizzy swing of conversation

A collection of lips pressed against mouthpieces while some press themselves against others, you hear so much more music than music, you hear bodies knowing their way. They move within the moments between syllables, their record spinning in the spaces.

Wherever alleyways and city blocks, there is the flight of bodies, dancers on midnight
folding into the neighbourhood,

the crackle of shoes atop sidewalks and the crackle of a wild microphone are the same voice

Jeremy Chu is a Filipino-Chinese poet, writing as a guest on the unceded territories of the Sk̓wx̓wú7mesh (Squamish), Səl̓íl̓wətaʔ/Selilwitulh (Tseil-Waututh) and xʷməθkʷəy̓əm (Musqueam) Nations. He has been featured in W49, Pocket Lint, and Capsule Stories. His writing wonders: How does love reveal itself as it crosses The Pacific?

FIRST PLACE

and forever, when high notes settle on these blanketfall evenings it is no new thing, because settling only comes after a lay of the land.

the stone artist

Theresa Rogers

is tending to his cairn again, gently balancing

one jagged stone on to another

until each is poised impossibly on its own

thick sea rock pressing into mussel shells

bruised and broken

each day brings a new topology

along the curved seawall of the far Northwest

lined with silver trees—cavenio sagrada (Españoles) or cascaras to those who first paid witness still, his sculpted birds

won't wing or birth as they keep vigil

Theresa Rogers
is a teacher and poet living in Vancouver. She has published
poems in English Bay Review,
Cape Cod Poetry Review, Cape Cod Times, Uppagus
and other venues.
She received an MFA from Antioch
Los Angeles.

SECOND PLACE

in cold winds and king tide swells

asking only for one last moon

before starting their slow slide back to the sea

Contrasts

Donna Seto

The chipped wooden cane of my century-old grandmother beats haphazardly against the damp asphalt.
drumming to a history of broken dreams fossilized by grey-black gum chewed by absent ancestors.

Donna Seto is a writer, academic, and artist from Vancouver, B.C. Her work has been published in The New Quarterly, Ricepaper Magazine, and academic journals. Donna is working on her first novel, a collection of short stories, and an illustrated book on Vancouver's Chinatown.

A mustached man on East Pender, a has-been accountant with a southern Chinese accent
my grandmother once mistook as her late husband, hollers across the crowd of Sunday shoppers that his gai lan is fresher, greener, and crisper than his competitor's on Keefer.

His calculated eyes full of adulterous ambitions, the slight upturn of his lips resembling a smile that women once swooned over during better times.

"On sale, poh-poh," the man who is not my grandfather says.
"Bargain—Ninety-nine cents a pound."

The man's village accent echoes down the paint-splattered street, sending pigeons flocking from frayed electric lines.

Hushed chatter
of forgotten rice patties and fermented fish sundried on an old laundry line above a charcoal fire in a blackened hut, no different from the one my grandmother once called her home.

The tattered shoes on my grandmother's unbound feet

THIRD PLACE

shuffle alongside graffitied walls and broken windows.
Post-apocalyptic scenes of a war-torn past made present except this is not a war,
 at least not the kind with guns and grenades.

Hungry tastebuds dance to the rhythm of fat glistening on golden roast ducks strung out on silver hooks in a butcher shop window on Gore, laminated with grease as thick as the layers of paint on its exterior.

“The city donated paint to fix this graffiti problem,” the butcher tells my grandmother, breathing out a drawn-out sigh while waving his cleaver, “We suffer there, we suffer here.
 Who did I wrong in my past life?”

My grandmother’s cataract eyes squint at the shadows that flicker to the glow of a red paper lantern, while pale-skinned tourists watch the fat drip from carcasses like raindrops cascading to the ground from rooftops.

A hipster waltzes into the butcher shop,
in designer jeans he claims are from Value Village, but he purchased on a whim from Nordstrom.
Belly full of foie gras served on heirloom sourdough, he washes down with a $7 oat milk latte, while k-pop blasts from his thousand-dollar earbuds as he snaps a photo of my century-old grandmother.

“Authentic china-doll poh-poh,” the hipster says as he shares the filtered snapshot with the world.

Victory Square Lament

Christina Barber

Monument in Victory Square
Erected there, a solemn prayer
Grey granite obelisk in stead
Marks the passing of our dead
One Great War laid innocence bare

Christina Barber is a Vancouver teacher and writer. She is an avid reader with a passion for Canadian history and literature and blogs about her reads. She loves to learn about Vancouver's history and to explore its natural areas.

Bagpipes skirl, lead in to this affair
At ease, remove the caps they wear
On lapels flare Poppies crimson red
Our monument in Victory Square
Veterans, in honour standing there
While the flypast drones the air
Last Post, Reveille resound overhead
Hymns sung; poetry read Promises made, burdens to share
Our monument in Victory Square

Witnessed by a thousand eyes
April city springs to cries Of Strike!; workers, jobless, veterans attacked
To standoff, police were quick to react Flee to the Square, strikers stabilize

When delegates returned with no replies McGeer took steps to neutralize With odds, against them, stacked Witnessed by a thousand eyes

Rationale: countering Communist spies Mayor's moment to self-aggrandize God Save the King! Read the Riot Act Anger, resentment boiled, tensions cracked Trek-on-to-Ottawa!, the crowd decries
Witnessed by a thousand eyes

Faraway shores
March sons, proudly, while the crowd roars Saluting past the monument
The Lost Generation too cognizant Sacrifices, demands of wars

Weary feet-body-mind deplores Hailing bullets, like spring downpours
On a distant continent
Faraway shores

Home again, seek simple splendours Remembrance beyond memorial gym doors Standing tall, humble monument Yours too, for those lost, the complement On beaches, valleys, fields, lie scores Home now, those faraway shores

All ye that pass by Who stand under November's sky
What of others there, who make do?
Downtrodden, forgotten, seen through Poverty, the Square does magnify

Against tyranny, soldiers solidify
For freedom and peace fortify The plinth recalls, "Is it nothing to you?"
"All ye that pass by"

The many who hurt, who cry
To be seen, heard and to ally Wherefore did we lose those of virtue?
Their name liveth for evermore?
Walking there, turn not a blind eye
All ye that pass by

Monument in Victory Square
Erected there, a solemn prayer
Grey granite obelisk in stead
Marks the passing of our dead
Too many wars laid innocence bare

Bagpipes skirl, lead in to this affair
At ease, remove the caps they wear
On lapels burn Poppies, crimson red A moment of silence ...

Veterans, in honour standing there
While the flypast drones the air
Last Post, Reveille resound overhead
Angelic voices rise, tears shed
Promises made, burdens to share
Monument in Victory Square

Alma

Sandra Bruneau

Along Alma, the mountains bedazzle the bay below. The roadway dips down and meanders past Almond Park, our rallying point.

Vancouver is peaks, parks, and promenades, no less than sales and shipping. Always, we've gathered on streets to dream dreams, contest plans. Alma is today's stage.

Our demonstrators—bathers, climbers, gardeners, walkers—wend north to the bay. We hoist homebrewed blue-yellow flags, dozens of signs.

Traffic stops. Lights hesitate, pedestrians stare, thongs grow. Like a steady flowing river, we move north—loving nature, peace, justice, and civil liberty.

Alma is a river in Crimea flowing northwest from mountains to Black Sea. Our hand-drawn placards tell that over a century past, allied forces beat back the Russians, but the Russians overtook the land again, and with it, the Alma.

Ukrainians fought as underdogs to retake the land.
More than once did they battle, short of victory, hundreds of lost lives.

This time, it will be different. We'll help them—we who walk and ride freely along Alma.
We'll raise the common consciousness.

As a former teacher and present community activist, Sandra Bruneau likes to express her thoughts about what is happening around her in poetic form. She has written poems for pleasure for many years, and since 2017 has been active with the UBC Emeritus group devoted to reading and analyzing poems.

Vancouver City Poems 2022-2024

There's talk of Ukraine's Alma and ours. We send supplies and medics, house refugees, and meet in high places. Constancy encounters no roadblocks.

The Ukrainian Spirit lifts ours. We are afire with what we should and can do. We organize, gather donations, take names, march to downtown.

Muralists and gardeners speak of blue and yellow sunflowers along Alma. Along both Almas.

Near Commercial

Max Harper

Here is the building where I used to live and here is where my aunt used to live and my other aunt and there a friend of the family

Here is the balcony where I looked at the sunset sometime as a child bloom of orange all over the sky like seventeen suns setting and the sound of the sky crying happily

Anime TV
 late night 1990s Britannia library
 and what it meant to be a human being something that has only confused me more now that I see how small Britannia library really is

And here is the place that burned down and broke my young heart that felt that when I lost a part of the street I lost a part of myself

The swimming pool in snow through windows

Max Harper lives in Vancouver. He has published in the Salt Chuck City Review, the Orsmy Review, and translations of the Indonesian poet Chairil Anwar in Columbia Journal and Lunch Ticket.

Vancouver City Poems 2022-2024

Somehow the street
 will never smell so concrete again the wild feeling of a child of the time when the city was not so expensive and we could feast on light

An Existence That We Can Call Home

James Kim

Sitting quietly by the First Narrows remembering The Lost Salmon-Run, of the ravenous yearning for strength, unaware of the consequences that will devastate our community, shattering the solace seen in the sea.

Rumbling throughout the city of glass.
Making space for something new, though no one asked.
It was for the greater good, they said.
They lied
and we could not believe them.

They sought power to feed a starving greed to gross and gluttonous excess.
Though they never thought it came at a cost.
And they did not believe us.

We have only the memories,
 the stories,
 the truth to guide us,
ground us to an existence that we can call home.
When they tell us to never forget,
we must remind them
we have never forgotten.

James Kim has been writing poetry since his first year of his undergraduate career. He's currently in pursuit of a Master's of Art in Counselling Psychology: Art Therapy. He's always known poetry as a way to express one's emotions.

Vancouver City Poems 2022-2024

We are taught by our parents,
 our peers,
 our people,
we could not trust those who break promises made.

For the marginalized communities of Stanley Park, both new and old.

Note: First Nations villages, as well as Chinese, Portuguese, Hawaiian, and mixed-race inhabitants, were forcibly displaced by civic authorities to make way for what we now know as Stanley Park.

The Garden, Echoes I

Vivian (Xiao Wen) Li

i.

smooth river leads to quiet winter dust on my fingers frozen, with stars in water, lantern fish in the wind.
I've longed for herons in my sleep,
jade water in trembling eyes,
for mountains to retire on,
cranes crooning a monsoon song.
In the garden, across generations, stones weigh us to the earth, as the living hums with the remembered, still slumbering

ii.

Leaning on the white wall a few steps from Moon-Gate, river flowing like thrumming glass, an echo-chamber reaching into golden souls and verdant depths deep beneath rocks yīn tiān, yīn for melancholic, hopeful—the borrowed view of the park, cornered by hum-drums of cars.

A crow perched on the drip tiles wavers and soars beneath helicopters, its partners driving gnats and insects underneath waves of garden homes. They told me at the entrance to walk slowly, enjoy yīn and yáng, to harmonize with the spirit still lingering here 36 years since its conception
fighting against the thrall of capitalism
the pond beats on in stolen land, the Georgia Viaduct trembling as she remembers who she could've been.
I glance down, witnessing Tàihú Rocks rising from the knuckles of my interlaced fingers—

Vivian Li is a queer, 1.5 generation Chinese Canadian immigrant with creative works published in The Fiddlehead and CV2, among others. A MFA graduate in Creative Writing from UBC and longlisted for the 2024 CBC Short Story Prize, she is looking for a home for her debut experimental novel.

Vancouver City Poems 2022-2024

the canyons and rivers, the hills of the college, the inclines I skipped up with my grandmother to purchase bird-feeders and sweet mochi.

The alpine winds above,
my feet itching to run into the verdant field sparkling with coins. Is it too early to retire to the mountains like Zhūgě Liàng and wait for scholars to knock on my thatched cottage when my return is imminent?

iii.

past the look-out point:
red fences, fields,
Boys of the Old Testament playing soccer.
Cars flying by hum
with the whispers of bamboo.
Fuchsia, plums, bamboo, chrysanthemums—as magnolias bloom, pink,
each a curled sweet center unfurling, toes as curled as gumdrops.

White orchid lips open over the water,
heads adorned with Nature's warmth, leaning to catch their eyes in the reflection.

The tour guide said they were either seeking validation,
or bowing to the garden in respect.

Stepping over Moon-Gate, we watch underneath to relinquish the shadows we've pulled inside.

The pond pillows out her dress, smoothes over the ripples in her body.
A mallard duck and his partner squabble as they swim over, preening, spirits reaching into the water,
into the Ting's reflection of heaven.

Witness light spilling as drops of Spring sparkle onto my head.

The Garden, Echoes II

i.

Ink-flowers peach and shy,
tulip-bulbs,
flame candles. Within broken rocks and sparrow wormholes, the woman in red plays the gǔ qín—underneath the pavilion head, the young spruce-wood chair echoing her mezzo-soprano voice beneath cherry blossoms.

Lingering alone:

to long for the scent of a song.

ii.

water spills through the head of heaven,
sky and pond interlacing fingers and foam—Western winds blowing to China, to the graves of my grandfather and grandmother.
Memorial,
the yellow-shirted me who spun, responding to “beauty” at fourteen. When we bowed before the tablets with faces foreign to us. The ground chilling on my palm—when these stone tiles reveal faces we remember, how long will our memories last?

iii.

In this garden built to bridge between West and East, chillier on this south pavilion, bamboo, cherry blossom. The ink of a general has not yet dried.
Go, the black-and-white pieces sing. Find prosperity, propel mind to action.

Brushes hang, vertical behind the jade statue of Guān yīn, merciful to us who stumble by.

Rocks, smooth-edged and rising, tiny mountains. Perhaps Chén Xiāo broke them in his youth, testing the strength of his love for his entombed mother.
The two-plank bridge to the Tīng closed off with bamboo sticks.
Beyond, a waterfall cascades over stones.
My fingers freeze from excess yīn, fog haloing my fingers.

iv.

Intangible Threads

in tessellated moments,
a spiral;

straight edges. Gold pins leading to the edge of a quilt or dark hole.

Spreading in straight formations, a building swallowed by pride. Above, remains of pinwheels thread dangle silver beside to white.

Echoing threads of factory,
woven quilt, her maternal line's lineage.
Her father, represented by factories, thick paints on canvas. Her mother, thread and textiles,

the woven fabric of Sūzhōu's creators.
Herself, caught between West and East.

v.

Mountains emerge through rhombi and trapezoids, dancing along the edge of what remains;
white space in black and silver; divide, sparkle.

A shirt unfolded,
a pomegranate blooming open,
stairs in parallel falling to earth,
opening sky and 天堂 to us.
And in the hallway connecting canvases to passersby,
the sound of an artist resounds: 苏向

vi.

like paintings, the shadows on walls are the shadows of the world they are recording the stone, trees, everyone, and everything,
breathing, ever-changing, momentary—transient homes for the passersby—

single mother on hastings

Angela May

she left clues, memories, dots of inhabitation:
a man frozen at a cutting board, a woman hanging laundry,
a child at the inlet, collecting shiners,
all of them making home a speckled thing, shaping city into light, stacked high, set adrift

Angela is a mixed Japanese Canadian writer, artist, and activist based in Vancouver, B.C. She is also a PhD Student in the Department of English and Cultural Studies at McMaster University. Her creative and community writing has been published in emerge 20, The Bulletin/Geppo, Nikkei Images, The Volcano, and other forums.

she spun mischief into whereabouts, and settled in for the journey, letting the man, the woman, the child become themselves, letting the city speak its volumes, which were soft but stuck—the string section caught in arched-back G, home as dough, éclair, delicious in its warmth, in the mud or chocolate
of tending

she spelled these thoughts with leftovers:
maze gohan, the little bodies of rice turned dry and hard from the leaving, mice scurrying at her feet, in the streetcar, its course mapped and remapped to avoid the traffic of spirits

she releases steam like a punk city she is street
spinning stories, twisting words.
curated and bullshitless,
she beckons, sidelong in the current,
self undone, oxydized, woman as fresco.

the streetcar stops; and now exiting, she is set loose coins to sewage, doubles drained, x's marked, bills split, she has arrived, she who was destined to get the dirt and deal with it, to become dirty herself—so that when some unexpected freight a celestial tug at the hem looks up, open-mouthed, releasing the truth about story the child, in operatic lustre, uncanny and horrid and gaping and miraculous,

i now can live with a roommate ancestor, in this city, up the stairs, down the hall, and in the middle on the left;
so that i now can prick my finger,
run it along the walls,
read the loom of the lion, learn the infrastructure of lessons

Winning poems YOUTH

VPL Award Ceremony, June 11, 2022: Rachel Rose presenting Youth shortlist on behalf of Bonnie Nish.

and then like the elders, gold rock, nothing gold can stay she hoists me atop her head as i watch the ending of the movie.

i lived it.
the 20 bus taking me into the thick into the plot twists and turns into the perms which held the tears of her sister as she walked to start the film.

i watched as she ended it.
burned and blazed like gum gook yuen her kidney failed while the lights went dim, while the tong fell silent, sequoias being felled.
even though there are always different bus drivers, something feels similar.
im watching the film again, not the live stream. but the film.
its ending again.
i can feel it as the seats become woven plastic. it ended a long time ago. i just sit there. my bosom nudged into the mattress, the red streetpost stares at me.

and sleeps, the grocer falls into the abyss. the series comes to an end.

the verdigris was peeled back, then a new coat of copper, half raw Industrial-chic Inner city gentrification “verdigris green” slapped over it. For the ending credits

Are cheap, but the broken queues are long.

Lotus Flower

Isabel Hernandez-Cheng

Filthy water
Squalid streets
From filth they bloom Morning dew delicately sat on a petal Industrious tears fill the eyes of Chinese pioneers

An arduous odyssey
A single man's journey
In hope for promised gold and glory
His family patiently waits for an indefinite date Sorrowful evenings

Two lonely hearts stare at the solitary moon

For a privileged price
He can hope for half a humble life

Thousands of miles away from home
In this Chinatown
He walks down Shanghai alley
And sees familiar faces
He hears tense Chinese opera
A discovered sense of calm in his home dialect

In a society where he is not welcomed Chinatown embraces and empowers
He can find a clan amidst the rundown streets Where in this foreign land he finally belongs

Bright red lanterns decorate the streets Enticing neon welcome signs flash as he walks by A steamy smell arises from a bamboo basket of chashu bao Shop owner's wife beckons him in

In 2022, Isabel Hernandez-Cheng was an eighth grade student attending York House School in Vancouver. She enjoys studying social studies and English language arts. She took inspiration for this poem from a visit to several exhibitions about Chinese history in Chinatown.

Vancouver City Poems 2022-2024

The muddy pond in which lotus flowers bloom Chinatown, the muddy pond in which he flourishes
He came as a seed and planted himself in this neighbourhood Unassuming and taken advantage of Chinatown is where he finds his worth
He will give and give before he fights for his rights Sacrificed sons lost to war Fighting for a country that they needed to prove their worth to

The alluring lotus flower
Like the Chinese immigrants Who found their home in Chinatown Came from a pond of struggles and inequalities Yet bloomed, so beautiful and strong

Home at Vie's

Sharon Pan

A drizzle, a dash, a sprinkle of fine oil on heated pans

Harmonious rhythms ring from the band playing on the stage

Warmth flutters up in your chest

The heat wraps around your heart like a blanket on your stomach on a cold winter day, stroking the patters of your heartbeats

A magnetic pull, strumming the strings of your veins

Clatters of wine glasses

Chatter in a crowded room rises

The sweetness crawls into throats

Crushed garlic and gravy mixing, creating a flavourful taste that stays in your mouth

Shadows dance in a celestial light cast from the rays of the sun, flickering behind thin curtains

All the dreams of life branch from this stage

A drop of happiness creates inspiration for everyone

At Vie's Chicken and Steakhouse

In 2022, Sharon Pan was in Grade 7. She likes cats, writing, and eclairs.

Lost in Chinatown

Patricia Chen

My identity is held together by a series of dashes,
A jumbled code only some understand.

And only some will understand the pain of being held together by wiry stitches.

The pain of unintentionally erasing a piece of themselves, In search of something that better glues their loose parts together.

The pain of scratching at the mind's interior, Relentlessly digging for eternity for one of the many voices lost within their own head.

Perhaps it's the fault of a young, oblivious child.
Being introduced to a new world,
With new voices, new views, new tongues.
A new identity.

Can we blame society's washing machine?
Rinsing the child of the old world, Wringing her dry?
Hung on a wire to be freshened, as the breeze whisks away any last droplets of the tattered child.

Society hands her a needle and chicken wire, preparing her to stitch herself up once she starts to remember.

She explores a worn out street with heavy pockets.
Stained windows reveal shelves upon shelves of dried roots, and traditional medicine.

Seagulls and geese rest on brick ledges Overlooking streets that house dumpling businesses, $10 hair perms, and polished jade pendants.

In the nooks of the alleyways, there are doors that lead to butcher shops filled with chilled flesh,

In 2022, Patricia Chen was a student at Windermere Secondary School with a passion for expressing herself through visual art and literature. She enjoys reading, creating art, and writing poems inspired by her thoughts and experiences.

Vancouver City Poems 2022-2024

loading docks for struggling grocers, and kitchens with overworked parents.

Red lampposts line the asphalt as a towering structure marks the entrance to the street: Vancouver Chinatown Millennium Gate.

Xie Shan roofs cut the air as orange tiles contrast with blue sky.

She can envision the dances of decorated lions coursing through the street.

An old woman's face filled with harsh wrinkles taps her shoulder,

Breaking the trance.

"Do you speak Chinese?"

A choked sound doesn't escape.

The old woman walks away, and in a desperate attempt to follow the woman, she trips from the weight of her pocket.

In a frenzy, she clutches the needle and wire, furiously digging into the frayed splits on her skin.

This anguish is so newfound.

Yellow flickers from lampposts as dusk pours over the quaint town.

What is left of her?

Piles of detached memories.

Faint visions of her younger self.

Tangled chicken wire, and the damned needle that came with it.

I sit in a red pool that matches Chinatown's red lampposts.

Perfectly.

I look around at my darkened surroundings.

I find myself lost in the alleyways of Chinatown.

Revival

Katie Evans

In 2022, Katie Evans was a grade 11 student at Point Grey Secondary. She has lived next to this forest on the traditional territory of the Musqueam nation her whole life and loves writing poetry.

I am here,
trees climb the sky,
reaching for stars,
pulling them down in rain.
The ground is buoyant, alive with moss
and decay
or rebirth.
Wind pulls branches
into swaying dances, giving them life through movement.
Roots stretch—a tapestry
connecting the trees, bringing their dance to the ground
so even the saplings can sway along.
Leaves rustle, feathers rustle, wings beat
to the rhythm of the wind.
I am part of this dance.
Those wings are my own.
I am alive

Lightless Fireflies

Debbie Li

Fireflies were always quite nice to see, for they glowed ever so brightly.

With beauty comes vulnerability.

But people took advantage and trapped them in jars
So that they could enjoy their light for themselves.

They planted seeds of houses in what were the jars.

This jar was different than the land they flew in, the land called čəsnaʔəm.

They came to the small village and infected the fireflies with diseases, and viruses that they were unfamiliar with.

Many fireflies lost their light, forgot how to glow.
In čəsnaʔəm they left their things as they died off.
Those things became décor and display without their permission.

They were placed in the ancient Musqueam Museum.
The fireflies lost their land, lost their culture,
lost their village.

Fireflies were always quite nice to see, before they lost their light because you stole it away.

In 2022, Debbie Li was a 14-year-old who was attending York House School. She has a passion for writing poetry and prose, as well as creating art pieces.

BBQ Meat Shops

Ya Xin Lu

I wasn't here in 1970
when a hundred golden-brown ducks lined the windows of this street
and a thousand voices flew raucously char siu rou!
niu rou ga li!

In 2022, Ya Xin Lu was a Grade 11 student at University Hill Secondary School. She loves to write speeches and hopes to study Political Science. As a Chinese-Canadian immigrant, she is fascinated by the rich history and culture of Vancouver's Chinatown, as well as Vancouver in general.

bai zhuo gai lan!
and little footsteps pattered on the concrete begging mama for just one treat while big laughs bounced off watery glass onto salty air and sweet grass

I wasn't here in 1975
when the white men came knocking on the door rows of kao ya thrown on the floor voices dead
air sour bullshit about cooking temperature spewed for hours because buttered steak raw is bourgeois but char siu pork tended fully is deadly

I wasn't here in 1976
when my people rose a whole association to oppose the people who took our laughter when they left Voices turned redder than red marching up Parliament Hill ahead

I am here in 2022
when a few golden-brown ducks line the windows of these streets
and a dozen voices walk peacefully Try all they please
No one can take away this salty breeze

Khupkhahpay'ay*: A Found Poem

Words Gathered from Commercial Drive

Nazifa Nawal

who gather heritage and reconciliation for the renewal of britannia

respect and welcome families from the drive

every child matters

britannia

honor survivors whose land and culture shape future generations who make police afraid and communities safe

empower teens from exclusionary politics reconciliation is disaster support history is a legacy

acknowledgement was a choice negligence was authentic in a colossally mishandled city

east van with no consent

unceded territory

grandview woodland

Nazifa Nawal (she/her) is a first-generation immigrant from Dhaka, Bangladesh. As an uninvited settler moving into the Britannia Community, she feels it is extremely important for her to pay her respects to the unceded lands and make efforts to commemorate its history.

*Squamish name for “cedar”

In Google Maps, I Explore Chinatown For the First Time

Crystal Peng

In 2022, Crystal Peng was living in Vancouver, B.C., editing for the Flat Ink and reading EX/POST. When not writing, she spends her time propagating succulents, listening to the Goldberg Variations, or in a Wikipedia rabbit-hole about oysters.

Millennium gate. Snow, dirtied, clots curbs. Cars drift: junks over Pender; Huangpu runs in asphalt, shimmering with Pacific brine. Street lamps flooding red, imperial in the half-light, flicker hidden dragons to life: origami shadows, exfoliating walls. I, yellow girl on Google Earth, follow the floating arrows: a tourist's trail, a hero's journey, a kind of homecoming. I, riding the following seas, rail tracks, rushes of gold back to Shanghai, Shanghai Alley (these streets named for mainland cities, traffic jams¹, strange flowers²). I, sock-eyed and yellowing in streetview light, swarm upstream, past curdling technicoloured graffiti, past snakes of vape smoke, past faux-neon signs with the characters I can no longer decipher. Here, I am trying to find myself again. Take root. Propagate. Sow millet kernels into Yangtze basin as my ancestors did eight thousand years ago. Flock within this quarter like my compatriot immigrants to safety, to shelter. Tributaries gathering, bloodlines conglomerating, like wool on a spindle. Here, I am trying to find my country again. No: I am trying to remind myself that there is nothing of me to find here, only discards and parodies from another era. A diorama of a nation, a miniature of a civilization, a caricature of what I'm supposed to be. A yellow girl lost in an uncanny landscape, inaccessible by time. A yellow girl whose country is a museum in her heart. A yellow girl who was never really here. So each time a tone slips from

1. Chinese name of Carrall Street is 卡路, which translates to "jammed road."

2. Chinese name of Keefer Street is 奇花, which translates to "strange flower."

my tongue, muddied & bleached, I am crossed, like the perpetual bus wires, shamefully unpatriotic and bulbous like December lanterns. Each time I try to cross these millennial boundaries and go to the town which boasts a country, the stone lions melt me with their adamant gaze and I am a visitor to myself again.

The Town Where Time Stops

Alice Stanciu

Walking along the charming cobblestone streets.
Arrays of old buildings exposed by brick display themselves—Look at me! Look at me!

Alice Stanciu
has always been passionate about the architecture and unique styles of old buildings
and locations.
As someone who is very observant of their surroundings,
she finds poetry an amazing way to convey her feelings and help people see the beauty of the things around them.

Reclaimed wood and details are strewn along the block.
I'm caught in the moment, staring at the big old clock.
Tick tock, tick tock
The hour strikes six.

Bound by whistles, steam, and a playful little tune,
The sun starts to set, and the wind rushes around town
On such an Autumn day,
As I pass by the old maple tree,
Near Water and Carrall Street
A warm crimson building stands,
Two stories high.
A quiet place yet still so full of life.

I blink once,
Then again,
Processing the cast-iron windows, Defined fascia boards,
And golden keystone trims
... It must be Byrnes Block.

A place once full of cedar and maple trees,
Went from being trodden by the Coast Salish people,
To becoming a town overcome by settlers.
Once burnt down in a tragic fire,
Then later rebuilt again.

And even so,
The place resisted through all the rights and wrongs,
And all the lefts and rights of history From Granville to Vancouver, Or the toppling of Gassy Jack.
The place continues to be A symbol of perseverance and reconciliation.

Surrounded by spherical incandescent lamplights, Night has taken its place,
And I realize where I stand.
A place where time holds its breath,
So warm and enchanted—Glorious, Graceful, Gastown

Stage 2

Stage Two of the Project involved a contest for post-secondary students from pre-selected local public post-secondary courses in film, animation, media studies or digital studies to make poetry videos based on a curated list drawn from the shortlisted emerging and established category poems from Stage One. Supplemental published poems about local sites were added to ensure representation. Instructors of the following post-secondary and institutions agreed to have their students participate in the contest as a course project:

- Simon Fraser University: IAT 344 (Moving Images)
- University of British Columbia: FNIS 454 (Indigenous New Media)
- Emily Car University of Art & Design: 2DN 211 (2D Animation)
- Emily Car University of Art & Design: Foundation 160 (Core Media Studio)

Although their poems were not included on the list of poems for the post-secondary students to make poetry videos for the poetry video contest, youth finalists had the opportunity to learn how to make their own videos during a special workshop run by the EL Mashup Collective (Dora Prieto, Michelle Martin and Daniela Rodriguez) held at Moberly Fieldhouse.

After the awards ceremony, there was a free public screening of a selection of the post-secondary videos on Saturday, September 16th with the Word Vancouver Festival 2023 at UBC Robson Square. Two of the youth poetry videos were also included at this event.

Word Vancouver
YouTube

Vancouver City Poems 2022-2024

In early 2024, a program of 14 selected City Poems poetry videos was selected for screening on the Mount Pleasant Community Arts Screen for the period of May 2024-April 2025. A similar set of City Poems poetry videos was included as part of an online City Poems program with Houston's REELpoetry festival in April 2024, both co-curated by MPCA curator Alger Ji-Liang and the poet laureate.

Mount Pleasant
Community Arts
Screen website

Students were strongly encouraged to submit their poetry videos to other festivals, which has led to a few of the City Poems poetry videos being selected for screenings at poetry video festivals and other events in Banff, Montreal, Seattle, Wellington (New Zealand), Copenhagen, and elsewhere.

REELpoetry festival
website

Because of the potential educational content of the poetry videos (for teaching about local history as well as teaching poetry or film), a teachers' resource list containing links to 14 poetry videos and related poems has been compiled. This has been provided to the Vancouver Heritage Foundation to possibly supplement its Heritage Study Guide for Teachers. Additionally, two City Poems poetry videos have been chosen for rotational screening at the Chinese Canadian Storytelling Centre in Vancouver.

Teachers' resource lists

"Postcard Home from English Bay" playing on the MPCAS screen

Emily Carr University, 2DN 211 (2d Animation)

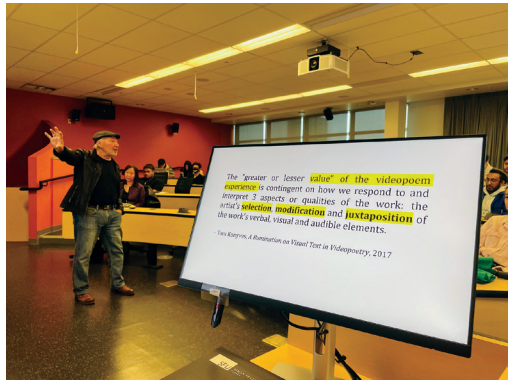

Emily Carr University, "Contrasts" team with poet Donna Seto and instructor Martin Rose at Chinatown Storytelling Centre

Emily Carr University, Foundation 160 (Core Media Studio) with instructor Christine Stewart and poets Theresa Rogers and Sandra Bruneau

Simon Fraser University: IAT 344 (Moving Images)

Tom Konyves visits IAT 344 class

University of British Columbia: FNIS 454 (Indigenous New Media) with author and artist Debra Sparrow

Additional poems for Poetry Video contest

In order to ensure diverse representation of sites and communities, these five poems were added to the roster of poems to be considered by student teams who would be making poetry videos.

Welcome

Sadhu Binning

I often speak to the grass
the trees and the river
they never tell me
I wasn't welcome
I've heard the wind chatting with leaves not once a note of hatred the rain and the snow touch me on my shoulders as many other friends do the birds come every morning and sing outside my window welcoming me into a new place a new day
why weren't they consulted when the decision was made to send my Komagata Maru away

Sadhu Binning, a retired UBC language instructor, has authored and co-authored more than eighteen books of poetry, fiction, plays, translations and research, including his 1994 bilingual poetry collection No More Watno Dur. His works have been included in more than fifty anthologies both in Punjabi and English.

Note: The infamous S.S. Komagata Maru incident in 1914 involved a steamship of 376 passengers from India being denied entry by the Canadian government. The ship was detained in Vancouver's harbour for two months without food, water, or medical care before it was forced to return to India where many passengers were killed or imprisoned.

This Was Meant To Be For Nora

Junie Desil

i dreamt Jimi last night
tight purple pants frenetically keeping beat sequins, scarves and pink feather boa jamming and getting down to Voodoo Child
wah wah pedal squealing

a lullaby

i dreamt Jimi last night
fell asleep thinking about his grandmother Nora

827 east georgia street

i wanted my thoughts to permeate my dreams have a conversation inspire something if not epic at least sit at her knees grandmother to granddaughter like pass history future tense

talk community

but damn that sexy intro to Vietnam War (Machine Gun)
kept intruding in my dreamscape

Junie Désil is a poet born of immigrant (Haitian) parents on the Traditional Territories of the Kanien'kehá:ka in the island known as Tiohtià:ke (Montréal), raised in Treaty 1 Territory (Winnipeg).
Junie's debut
poetry collection
Eat Salt/Gaze at the Ocean (TalonBooks, 2020) was a finalist for the Dorothy Livesay
Poetry Prize.

Vancouver City Poems 2022-2024

i wanted to do more than a passing nod to a fierce woman who cofounded the African Methodist Episcopal Church

823 jackson street

floats hazily in my dreams all bright neon-y pink-y purple to Jimi's acid guitar riffs Nora nods her head claps Bible in hand
what a trip.
i dreamt Jimi last night and this was meant to be for Nora

What Do I Remember of the Evacuation?

Joy Kogawa

What do I remember of the evacuation?
I remember my father telling Tim and me About the mountains and the train And the excitement of going on a trip.
What do I remember of the evacuation?
I remember my mother wrapping A blanket around me and my Pretending to fall asleep so she would be happy Though I was so excited I couldn't sleep (I hear there were people herded Into the Hastings Park like cattle.
Families were made to move in two hours, Abandoning everything, leaving pets
And possessions at gun point.
I hear families were broken up.
Men were forced to work. I heard It whispered late at night That there was suffering) and I missed my dolls.
What do I remember of the evacuation?
I remember Miss Foster and Miss Tucker Who still live in Vancouver And who did what they could And loved children and who gave me A puzzle to play with on the train.
And I remember the mountains and I was Six years old and I swear I saw a giant Gulliver of Gulliver's Travels scanning the horizon
And when I told my mother she believed it too.

Joy Kogawa's
best known work is the award-winning novel, Obasan. Other publications include The Rain Ascends, Itsuka, *Emily
Kato*, *Gently
to Nagasaki*, Naomi's Road, Naomi's Tree, and poetry, From the Lost and Found Department.
Born in Vancouver, B.C. in 1935, she lives in Toronto, Ontario.

And I remember how careful my parents were Not to bruise us with bitterness.
And I remember the puzzle of Lorraine Life Who said "Don't insult me," when I Proudly wrote my name in Japanese.
And Tim flew the Union Jack
When the war was over but Lorraine
And her friends spat on us anyway.
And I prayed to God who loves
All the children in his sight
That I might be white.

Postcard home from English Bay

Alex Leslie

Nostalgia is a territory. Chainsmoking seagulls do yoga on the horizon at dawn. English Bay organized into lanes with flaming buoys for swimmers to do their drive-by banking. The bridge shut down for candidates who launch down the inlet on robotic wings, competing for votes. People tread water below to witness, swallow the new Pacific vaccine. The famous building with the tree growing out of its roof drinks rainwater, spits mercury into the teacups of developers. Acid rain rainbows the parade tie-dye, the marchers photograph their chemical shadows and post in Renaissance filter, reflections in oil paints. Pride bellyflops into a harbor of profit. The portrait artist hired by the Mayor works until sunset, then lies down in the surf and dissolves, skin floating off clear as a jellyfish, black formal tails trailing ink. It is so beautiful here. This child will draw your caricature for free by throwing a glass of coins in your face and raising his fingers to catch the bent light that arcs off your cheekbones. Blink and you'll miss the moon inspecting its own bruises, reading Captain Vancouver's letters home by the lights of a thousand rigs, miniatures available in bottles for collectors and investors. Visit soon.

Alex Leslie has published two books of poetry and two books of short stories, most recently Vancouver for Beginners which was shortlisted for the City of Vancouver Book Prize and won the Western Canada Jewish Book Prize for Poetry from the Lohn Foundation.

Know Who You Are and Know Where You Come From

Debra Sparrow

For my grandfather, ShWienum (Edward Sparrow) born in 1898 in a Musqueam village at the mouth of the Fraser River. He died in 1998 at the age of 99 and one half years.

Debra Sparrow is an esteemed Musqueam weaver, artist and knowledge keeper who has dedicated over 25 years to reviving the art of Musqueam weaving. Her work can be seen in various museums and institutions in Canada and the U.S., including the Museum of Anthropology and the YVR airport.

Driving along the shoreline of what is now called the City of Vancouver, my grandfather, ShWienum beside me, and one or more of my three children in the back seat, listening to him tell us the histories of our great lands, the same histories
his grandparents told him
as they drove along in horse and buggy, and the same histories
their grandparents told them, walking along these shores or in canoe.

300 years of stories are still being passed on.
ShWienum can rest, knowing as I have, as he did what we share
as people of this land.

Blessed to have this time with him,
I will take with me into the future the success and integrity of our people.

I know who I am,
I know my history,
and I know where I come from.
My roots are planted firmly in the very soil that my ancestors are buried in.

I am connected,
my children are connected,
and my grandchildren will be connected.

We will be here another millennium as we have been for nine millennia past.

When asked of the First Nations people: “Who said this land belonged to you?
There are no signs on a mountaintop.
It is not written anywhere.”

Anywhere you open the earth, the evidence is there.
 It is written in the earth.

Poetry video awards

After launching the second stage contest with a panel discussion and screening of sample poetry videos at the Vancouver Public Library, submissions opened in December/January and closed on April 22, 2023 with judging in May. Judge Heather Haley selected the top three poetry videos according to these criteria:

1. Artistically deepens, extends and/or transforms the meaning of the poems through the synergy of sound, text, and/or image.
2. Demonstrates creativity, originality, ingenuity and/or inventiveness.
3. Engages viewers/listeners.

The post-secondary student poetry videos were also posted on the Vancouver Public Library's YouTube Playlist for Audience Choice voting from April 26 to May 25, 2023.

The Museum of Vancouver hosted the awards ceremony and screening on June 11, 2023.

YouTube: VPL playlist of nominated poetry videos

Audience Choice Prize (ECUAD)

This was meant to be for Nora

Based on a poem by Junie Desil

Emily Carr University of Art & Design 2DN 211 Animation

- Deanne Angelina Emery
- Emilio Terrazas Rocha
- Carola Campa Garcia
- Rachel Christina Kearney
- Luna Davies
- Lingjun Mi
- Mingyang Pan

Audience Choice Prize (SFU)

Diaspora

Based on the poem “Entertainment” by Jeremy Chu

SFU IAT 344 (Term One)

- Kayla Canama
- Tingting Liu
- Andrea Huang
- Eleonora Shive

Audience Choice Prize (UBC)

Know Who You Are and Know Where You Come From

Based on writing by Debra Sparrow

UBC FNIS 454

- Madison Harvey
- Olivia Carriere McKenna
- Cass Minkus
- Sofia Bergman

First Place

Contrasts

Based on a poem by Donna Seto

SFU IAT 344 (Term Two)

- Brian Baldueza
- Nanop Yansomboon
- Wilson Pham

Second Place (tie)

What do I remember of the evacuation

Based on a poem by Joy Kogawa

Emily Carr University of Art & Design Foundation 160 (Core Media Studio)

- Kris Reyes
- Hoang Son Vu
- Poppy Suro
- Sodam Hong

Second Place (tie)

An Existence That We Can Call Home

Based on a poem by James Kim

SFU IAT 344 (Term One)

- Xinran Han
- Delai Gao
- Minyang Zhang

Third Place

This was meant to be for Nora

Based on a poem by Junie Desil

SFU IAT 344 (Term Two)

- Yen-an Huang
- Hanako Oba
- Dongmei Han
- Joanne Kim

Best Animation

This was meant to be for Nora

Based on a poem by Junie Desil

Emily Carr University of Art & Design 2DN 211 Animation

- Deanne Angelina Emery
- Luna Davies
- Emilio Terrazas Rocha
- Lingjun Mi
- Carola Campa Garcia
- Mingyang Pan
- Rachel Christina Kearney

Best Documentary-Style Video

Welcome

Based on a poem by Sadhu Binning

SFU IAT 344 (Term Two)

- Kais Neffati
- Bhalinder Oberoi
- Ishmael Togi
- Minh Truong

Best Visual Storytelling

Know Who You Are and Know Where You Come From

Based on writing by Debra Sparrow

UBC FNIS 454

- Robert Burns
- Delanie Austin
- Bea Lehmann
- Rachel Williams

Honourable Mention

The Stone Artist

Based on a poem by Theresa Rogers

SFU IAT 344 (Term Two)

- Grace Yang
- Brandyn Chew
- Jalene Pang
- Erin Yeonjae Choi

Honourable Mention

Entertainment

Based on a poem by Jeremy Chu

SFU IAT 344 (Term Two)

- Christy Fang
- Cici Tan
- Vito Fan
- Calvin Lin

Honourable Mention

Know Who You Are and Know Where You Come From

Based on writing by Debra Sparrow

UBC FNIS 454

- Maddy Nowell
- Kira Doxator
- Claire Everson
- Eva Moulton

SFU IAT 344 post-contest poems and poetry videos

Although the official poetry video contest had passed, SFU IAT instructor Kate Hennessy approached the poet laureate to continue the production of poetry videos in her course. As a result, a new set of students made a new batch of nine site-based poetry videos based on five different local poems chosen by the laureate. These new poetry videos were screened at the Vancouver Public Library on April 4, 2024. They are also posted on the VPL YouTube Playlist.

Poet laureate with instructor Kate Hennessy and teaching assistant Kenneth Karthik

YouTube: VPL poetry video playlist

Gravity, Gravititas

Gary Geddes

No warning, unless you count vibrations, sudden shrug before the bridge collapsed.
I felt it all right, stomach rising to my throat. My god, I thought, it's going down.
No time for philosophy;
no time for analysis. Simply,
I'm going to die.

The question is not did you feel fear—of course I felt fear—but the stages, changes in intensity, a moment of almost exhilaration, facing the ultimate, a self-pitying cringe in anticipation of pain, the whole spectrum,
the works.

I thought of my kids,
their faces hearing the news,
my wife's hand inching across an empty bed, my car left parked in the employee's compound and the Little League tournament next weekend.

Gary Geddes
has written and edited fifty books of poetry, fiction, drama,
translation, criticism, non-fiction, and anthologies and won a dozen national and international literary awards, including the Lt.-Governor's Award for Literary Excellence and the Gabriela Mistral Prize from the government of Chile. Born in Vancouver, B.C., he now lives on Thetis Island.

I recalled
the acceleration of gravity, thirty-two feet per second per second. And the graph:
time versus velocity.
I might have been falling in slow motion, given the kaleidoscope of images.

I'd just released my tool belt when I hit the water.

Screenshot from the video, "Gravity, Gravititas"

Ad Hominem

Chantal Gibson

How we see a thing—even with our eyes—is very much dependent on where we stand in relationship to it.

—Ngũgĩ wa Thiong’o (88).

in the mornings i walk past your statue to catch a train across a river with your name on it, to work at a university that still bears your name. i have to look up follow the diagonals of your waistcoat the open sails of your collar, the winded kerchief knotted round your ample neck angular jaw, closed mouth, classic nose centered, blocky, slightly more than an eye-length wide, all this to get to your unbounded stare, your immortalized gaze.

TO COMMEMORATE THE DISCOVERY VOYAGE DOWN THE RIVER BY SIMON FRASER 1808

Chantal Gibson is an award-winning writer-artist-educator living on the ancestral lands of the Coast Salish Peoples. Working in the overlap between literary and visual art, her graphic poetry collections How She Read (Caitlin 2019) and with/holding (Caitlin 2021) bring a critical lens to the historical representation of Blackness across cultural media.

Vancouver City Poems 2022-2024

on the way to campus, I return to my lesson:

- focus on the argument
- avoid personal attacks
- distinguish your ideas from others'
- credit those from whom you borrow
- don't take what's not yours

as I journey down the hallway to my classroom deeper inside the belly of another ship, my USB employee ID jangling from the branded lanyard round my neck, the irony ~~the fucking weight of it~~ is not lost on me. in the evening, i return home against the tide. Stow-low. Stó:lō. i take the long way not to look at you. i know it's just a matter of time before the river takes her name back, the valley and the canyon too, til we stop saying yours out loud and kern it to the nub—til we go the way of KFC and our descendants forget what the F stands for. i know it's just a matter of time before you're defaced, beer piss, red paint, Booster Juice, til they wrap a chain around your neck and drag n dump you in the river. some muddy part of me wants to gouge your eyes out, bitter the sculptor got them first, while another keeps a watchful eye on the rising condo markets—and settles for a little bird shit.

Screenshot from the video, "Ad Hominem"

At Our Punjabi Market

Kuldip Gill

Betis (daughters) and bhenjis (sisters) hear the cry,

Come buy saris, come buy our cholis!

Come buy, come buy

petticoats, chunis, salvar/kamiz,

bangles, and bracelets,

surma and mehndis

bindis and nose rings,

creams to whiten your skin,

or try threaded bow-like eyebrows.

Come buy, come buy!

How shy she looks, her mother frowns,

but bhenjis know the sheers are fine.

They twirl to see the lenghas line.

Oh, bhenji, make it mine, make it mine.

Together the beti and bhenji aspire.

Add it to the bill, they whisper and conspire to the merchant's cries: Come buy, Come buy!

Come buy! Come buy! The windows scream.

The same dollars for two of anything.

Hindu videos, stock of best English-Punjabi dictionary, new brass images of gods and goddesses.

In the Guru ka Bazaar, come buy, come buy.

Gifts to the hundreds of wedding guests in the beti's dowry—a crown for her husband;

the bride's home appliances. Come buy!

In gold jewelry shops—more per block than anywhere, bracelets and jeweled everything. Come buy, come buy!

Our Indian groceries. Garlic, ginger, heaps of eggplant, capsicum, okra, mustard greens and cauliflower.

Come smell the lentil and buy our spicy chai.

Kuldip Gill was born in Faridkot District, Punjab, India and immigrated to B.C. at age five. Gill's first book of poetry, Dharma Rasa (Nightwood Editions), was a winner of a BC Book Prize in 2000. Kuldip Gill passed away May 2009. Her second book of poetry, Valley Sutra, was published posthumously.

Vancouver City Poems 2022-2024

Come buy our golden sweets, burfis flavoured pistachio, peppered cashews,
almond, figs. Come buy, Come buy! Star fruit, ginger root.

Come buy, come buy your daughter's pots and pans, lunch boxes for her children, Main and 49th:
A bazaar, a cirque du soleil of sound and smell.
Come buy in the Punjabi vernacular, Hindi, Urdu, Tamil, Telegu, Tagalog, Fiji-bat, Italian, Greek, Mandarin and any other. Come buy!
Come buy! Come buy! At our Punjabi Market!

Screenshot from the video, "At Our Punjabi Market"

Lost Lagoon

E. Pauline Johnson

It is dusk on the Lost Lagoon,
And we two dreaming the dusk away, Beneath the drift of a twilight grey—Beneath the drowse of an ending day
And the curve of a golden moon.

It is dark on the Lost Lagoon,
And gone are the depths of haunting blue,
The grouping gulls, and the old canoe,
The singing firs, and the dusk and—you,
and gone is the golden moon.

O lure of the Lost Lagoon—
I dream to-night that my paddle blurs
The purple shade where the seaweed stirs—
I hear the call of the singing firs
In the hush of the golden moon.

Screenshot from the video, "Lost Lagoon"

Emily Pauline Johnson, also known as Tekahionwake ("double wampum"), was an acclaimed poet, writer and performer of European and Mohawk heritage. She published three collections of poetry and Legends of Vancouver, a series of stories told to her by Squamish Chief Joe Capilano. Born in 1861 on the Six Nations Reserve, she died in 1913 in Vancouver, B.C.

take a st. and

Rita Wong

sewage wafts up at the corner of fifth and st. george slosh gurgle downhill through indifferent pipe grid pipe grind your teeth pipe miles and miles of pipe underneath our feet smell water rushing under the manhole covers one pipe carries drinking water another carries away your toilet flush pipe down, pipe plastic, pipe slime, pipe time

corner the hydrant bursts chlorinated water shoots exuberant into sky coincidence, haunting, or the stubborn stream's refusal to be confined?

what's lost? not just the streams but the people who stole them from the salmon who swam them re-pair tributary with daylight twin riparian zone with home detourne st. george toward chief dan george Geswanouth Slahoot's spirit knows these unceded streams Snauq Staulk, te Statlōw

Screenshot from the video, "take a st. and"

Additional post-contest poetry video production

Two additional poetry videos, “Found” and “Ode to Vivian Chung”, were produced by the poet laureate. They are available for viewing on the VPL YouTube Playlist.

YouTube: VPL poetry video playlist

Found

James X. Wang

for Unknown Chinese Men buried in Mountain View Cemetery

James X. Wang is a writer, physician, and Chinese-Canadian settler on the unceded Indigenous lands of Vancouver. His poems have been published in Canadian literary magazines and two collaborative chapbooks (“Brine” and “Adventitious Sounds”). He is a member of the emerging poets group, Harbour Centre 5.

We used to play up the hill, bunkered under granite wings.
I wander tall among ancestors now footsteps buoyed on the breeze.
Stone islets stay supine.
They beckon to me, a roster call of Chius and Chins Suens and Lees.
Here in no man’s land
I am every man’s son.
They beg me to crouch, to smell the moss transfused with tangerines to touch my beating palm to the earth.
I tell them of my voyages up the hill surveys of shipwrecked sirens.
They nod along their dandelion heads.
I ask if they are lost.
Wingbeats inscribed their epitaphs dragonflies floating in Toisan wind atom by atom, a pilgrimage to pillars of dust.
Some are called home to the mountains, some to the sea’s rising tide.
The rest go with me back up the hill.

James Wang submitted this poem for the City Poems Contest 2022. The poet laureate shared it with staff at the Mountain View Cemetery, which put the poem on public display and commissioned a poetry video for its annual All Souls event in the autumn of 2023. The poetry video, made by Analee Weinberger and the poet, James Wang, was also included in the City Poems Program screened at the Mount Pleasant Community Arts Screen.

Screenshot from the video, "Found"

Ode to Vivian Jung

Fiona Tinwei Lam and Grade 5/6 students from Tecumseh Elementary School

At the segregated Crystal Garden Pool, crystal clear waters,
crystal clear rules.
Shimmering, shining pool of dreams for those of the right race.

A cento assembled and arranged by Vancouver Poet Laureate
Fiona Tinwei
Lam from lines selected from poems by Grade 5/6 students at Tecumseh Elementary School 2023-24.

It started small:
like a bright star shining, Vivian waited in line, ready to learn,
needing a swimming and water safety certificate to become a teacher.
Pool staff tried to turn her away.
“You can’t enter here!”
But she knew she was right.
Born in Merritt, B.C., she too had sung Oh Canada all her life.

Her coach and fellow students refused to enter the pool without her.
Those friends, those allies, fighting for the rights of all Asians and Blacks, united in courage,
the courage to say “We are equal.”
They didn’t back down.
Doors that were closed were then flung wide open!

Diving board springing, unfiltered laughter—Splash!
Vivian jumped off the diving board into refreshing freedom,
into equality so clear and clean.
The pool gleaming, sparkling, glittering,

now accessible to everyone.
Imagine the pride she felt—Exclusion from pools no more!
When she broke the colour ban, she broke down rigid minds,
made a whole city know she was right,
and swam into teaching for 35 glorious years.

What a wonderful teacher she would become!
An inspiration:
First Chinese Canadian teacher hired by the Vancouver School Board, coaching girls volleyball teams to City Championships, sharing her love of softball, dance and phys ed at Tecumseh Elementary for decades.

How can we solve inequality?
Thank you, Vivian and allies,
for showing us the way!

Screenshot from the video, "Ode to Vivian Jung"

Tecumseh Elementary School's Anti-racism Committee organized a fundraiser for a school mural to honour Vivian Jung, the first Chinese Canadian teacher hired by the Vancouver School Board in 1950 who taught at the school for 35 years, and also played a role in desegregating a local public pool. The poet laureate was asked to assist a grade 5/6 class taught by Thomas Aaron Larson in writing poems about her legacy. The students' poems became part of a poetry and art booklet to fundraise for the school mural. An audio-recording of the students narrating the cento poem and collages made by students from two other classes were integrated into a poetry video made by videographer Analee Weinberger.

Tecumseh Elementary School, Grade 5/6

Stage 3

Geolocative app

This phase of the City Poems Project combines the power of poetry, technology, and community perspectives to transform how students, educators, and the public engage with our urban environment through the development of a geolocative cell phone app that will serve as a bridge between geography, language, poetics, and technology. With a focus on accessibility, diversity, and inclusion, the geolocative app project aims to spark student and public engagement with poetry and deepen their connection between place and narrative by inviting them to immerse themselves “inside the stories” of Vancouver’s places and poems.

The laureate is collaborating with the team at CEDaR Space (Community Engaged Documentation and Research) at UBC’s Institute for Critical Indigenous Studies as they develop the app. The project is being overseen by Professors David Gaertner and Daisy Rosenblum with current Research Project Manager Mohsen Movahedi, CEDaR Lab Supervisor Dante Cerron, and CEDaR Coordinator Sara MacLellan, with design and development support from students and faculty in the Centre for Digital Media. The team has reached out to UBC instructors across various departments, including First Nations and Indigenous Studies (FNIS), English Language and Literatures (EL&L), Geography, and Creative Writing (CRWR), to explore the incorporation of the City Poems app into their classrooms to enhance the learning experiences of students across disciplines.

First Phase poems:

- “Contrasts” by Donna Seto
- “Found” by James Wang
- “Know Who You Are and Know Where You Come From”
by Debra Sparrow
- “Postcard home from English Bay” by Alex Leslie
- “This Was Meant To Be For Nora” by Junie Desil
- “Welcome” by Sadhu Binning
- “What Do I Remember of the Evacuation” by Joy Kogawa
- “Lost Stream” by Fiona Tinwei Lam

Vimeo: Introductory guide to the Locative Audio app

Appendix

Resources

City Poems Contest

fionalam.net/poetlaureate/citypoemscontest

Vancouver Poems and History

fionalam.net/poetlaureate/vancouverpoems

Poetry Video Resources (information and contests)

fionalam.net/poetry-video-resources

A Guide for Local Poets (reading series, courses and information)

fionalam.net/poetlaureate/additional-resources-for-writers

Vancouver Poet Laureate Blog about school visits, workshops and public fionalam.net/category/vancouver-poet-laureate-2022-2024/

Events and Activities

fionalam.net/poetlaureate/events-activities

Judges

Bonnie Nish is Executive Director of Word Vancouver and Pandora's Collective Outreach Society. She has a Masters in Arts Education from Simon Fraser University and a PhD in Language and Literacy Education from the University of British Columbia where she teaches. Bonnie's first book of poetry, Love and Bones, was released by Karma Press in 2013. Her book, Concussion and Mild Brain Injury: Not Just Another Headline, was published by Lash and Associates in 2016. Her book, Cantata in Two Voices, co-written with Jude Neal was published by Ekstasis Editions.

David Ly is the author of Mythical Man (shortlisted for the 2021 ReLit Poetry Award) and Dream of Me as Water, both published under the Anstruther Books imprint at Palimpsest Press. He co-edited Queer Little Nightmares: an Anthology of Monstrous Fiction and Poetry (Arsenal Pulp Press, 2022) with Daniel Zomparelli. David's poems have appeared in various publications such as PRISM international, The Puritan, Arc Poetry Magazine, and Best Canadian Poetry 2021.

Rachel Rose's fiction debut, The Octopus Has Three Hearts, was published by Douglas & McIntyre in 2021, and was longlisted for the Scotiabank Giller Prize. She is the author of four collections of poetry, including Marry & Burn, which received a 2016 Pushcart Prize, and was a finalist for a Governor General's Award. Her memoir, The Dog Lover Unit: Lessons in Courage from the World's K9 Cops, was shortlisted for the 2018 Arthur Ellis award for best non-fiction crime book. A former fellow at The University of Iowa's International Writing Program, she was Poet Laureate of Vancouver from 2014-2017.

Heather Haley is a Vancouver writer, singer, and videopoetry pioneer. Known for pushing boundaries by creatively integrating disciplines, genres and media, Haley published "The Edgewise Café," one of Canada's first electronic literary magazines, and ran Visible Verse, a videopoem festival while producing her own critically acclaimed videos. She is the author of poetry collections: Sideways, Three Blocks West of Wonderland, Skookum Raven and a novel, The Town Slut's Daughter. As AURAL Heather with Roderick Shoolbraid she released CDs of spoken word song, "Princess Nut" and "Surfing Season." Her work has toured Canada, the U.S. and Europe and appeared in a wide range of periodicals and anthologies.

Vancouver poems and history

Vancouver-based poems

Books

- Oana Avasiloichioaei, feria, 2008
George Bowering, Kerrisdale Elegies, 2008
Wayde Compton, Performance Bond, 2004 and 49th Parallel Psalm, 1999
Henry Doyle, No Shelter, 2022
Phinder Dulai, dream/arteries, 2014
George Fetherling, The Sylvia Hotel, 2010
Gary Geddes, Falsework, 2007
Chelene Knight, Dear Current Occupant, 2018 (lyric prose/prose poetry) Christopher Levenson, Getting to Know You, 2014 (illustrated, letter-press printed book)
Alex Leslie, Vancouver for Beginners, 2019
Daphne Marlatt, Liquidities: Vancouver Poems Then and Now, 2013 and Vancouver Poems, 1972 George McWhirter, editor, A Verse Map of Vancouver, 2009
Jane Munro, False Creek, 2022 Sachiko Murakami, Rebuild, 2011 and The Invisibility Exhibit, 2008 (about the missing and murdered women of the Downtown Eastside)
W. H. New, YVR, 2011
Meredith Quartermain, Vancouver Walking, 2005
Philip Resnick, Footsteps of the Past, 2015
Allan Safarik, editor, Vancouver Poetry, 2000 Bren Simmers, Hastings Sunrise, 2015
George Stanley, Vancouver: A Poem, 2008
Michael Turner, Kingsway, 1995
Diane Tucker, Nostalgia for Moving Parts, 2021
Betsy Warland, Lost Lagoon/lost in thought, 2020
Jim Wong Chu, Chinatown Ghosts, 2018

A sampling of individual Vancouver-themed poems

- Sadhu Binning, "Welcome" (about the Komagata Maru incident) from No More Watno Dur, 1994 Earle Birney, "November Walk Near False Creek Mouth" in Collected Poems
Henry Doyle, "Washroom Journals: Prep" from No Shelter, 2022
Marilyn Dumont, "City View" sequence in Green Girl Dreams Mountain, 2001
Mercedes Eng, "how it is" (from The Capilano Review, Spring 2018, pp 8-11) Chelene Knight, "Dear Current Occupant, Apartment on Clark Drive, Above the Convenience Store" and "955 East 10th Avenue" in Braided Skin, 2015
Joy Kogawa, What do I remember of the evacuation, 2009
Fiona Tinwei Lam, "Lost Stream" from Odes & Laments, 2019

Vancouver City Poems 2022-2024

- Evelyn Lau, "City Centre" from A Grain of Rice, 2012, "The Chinese Museum" from Tumour, 2016
- Alex Leslie, "Postcard Home from English Bay" from Vancouver for Beginners, 2019
- Lee Maracle, "I'm Home Again" in Manoa 25, no. 1, 2013: 17-20.
- Tariq Malik, "X Marks the Spot" in Unmooring the Komagata Maru: Charting Colonial Trajectories, 2020
- Sachiko Murakami, Project Rebuild (a public poetry project related to housing known as "Vancouver Specials" which includes a number of poems and "renovated poems" by local poets). www.sachikomurakami.com/pr/about.php
- Michael Prior, "Minoru", "The Night", "Richmond", and "Steveston" in Burning Province, 2020
- Philip Resnick, "Vancouver" from Footsteps of the Past, 2015
- RC Weslowski, "PNE Love Affair" from My Soft Response to the Wars, 2021
- Isabella Wang, "This Winter in Gastown" in Pebble Swing, 2021
- Phoebe Wang, "The Japanese Garden" (Nitobe Memorial Garden) and "Wreck Beach" in Admission Requirements, 2017
- Jim Wong-Chu, "hippo luck", in Chinatown Ghosts, 2018
- Cease Wyss, "Ode to Madeline Deighton" (from The Capilano Review, 3(35), 94, 2019)
- Jennifer Zilm, "Vancouvering" in First-Time Listener, 2022

Vancouver history

Websites

Vancouver Heritage Foundation Heritage Finder

www.vancouverheritagefoundation.org/discover-heritage/heritage-site-finder/

Places that Matter

placesthatmatter.ca/

Museum of Vancouver

museumofvancouver.ca/

Heritage Vancouver

heritagevancouver.org/

xʷməθkʷəy̓əm (Musqueam—A Living Culture)

www.musqueam.bc.ca/our-story/

Musqueam Territory Place Names Map

www.musqueam.bc.ca/our-story/our-territory/place-names-map/

Sk̓wx̓wú7mesh Úxwumixw (Squamish Nation)

www.squamish.net/about-our-nation/

Vancouver City Poems 2022-2024

səlilwətaʔ (Tseil-Waututh Nation—People of the Inlet)

twnation.ca/our-story/

Vancouver Public Library's This Vancouver

vpl.arcabc.ca/thisvancouver

Vancouver Public Library Local History Collections

www.vpl.ca/digital-library/local-history-collections

Video

B.C.: An Untold History (especially segments 3 and 4 in relation to Vancouver) (www.knowledge.ca/program/british-columbia-untold-history)

360 Riot Walk: a 360 Video Walking Tour of the 1907 Anti-Asian Riots in Vancouver in 1907 (<https://360riotwalk.ca/>)

Sampling of nonfiction books and authors

John Atkin

The Changing City: Architecture and History Walking Tours in Central Vancouver, 2010

Strathcona: Vancouver's First Neighbourhood, 1994

Skytrain Explorer: Heritage Walks from Every Station, 2005

Books by Aaron Chapman

Chuck Davis, The Chuck Davis History of Metropolitan Vancouver, 2011

Wade Compton, After Canaan: Essays on Race, Writing and Region, 2010

Books by Daniel Francis

Gary Geddes, editor, Skookum Wawa: Writings of the Canadian Northwest, 1975

Gary Geddes, editor, Vancouver: Soul of A City, 1986

Derek Hayes, Historical Atlas of Vancouver and the Fraser Valley, 2006

Pauline Johnson, Legends of Vancouver, 1911

Books by Michael Kluckner

Eve Lazarus, Sensational Vancouver, 2014 and Vancouver Exposed: Searching for the City's Hidden History, 2020 and her blog, Every Place Has A Story

Bruce Macdonald, Vancouver: A Visual History, 1992

Paul Yee, Saltwater City: Story of Vancouver's Chinese Community, 2006

Acknowledgments

These local site-based poems were included on the list of curated poems considered by post-secondary teams for making poetry videos for the City Poems Project. Thank you to the following poets and their publishers:

Sadhu Binning, “Welcome” from No More Watno Dur, Mawenzi House Publishers, 1994. Copyright © 1994 by Alex Leslie. Used with permission from the author.

Junie Desil, “This Was Meant To Be For Nora.” Commissioned for the January 2022 launch of the City Poems Project. Copyright © 2022 by Junie Desil. Used with permission of the author.

Gary Geddes, “Gravity, Gravitas” from Falsework, Goose Lane Editions, 2007. Copyright © 2007 by Gary Geddes. Used with permission of the author and Goose Lane Editions.

Chantal Gibson, “Ad Hominem” from with/holding, Caitlin Press, 2021. Copyright © Chantal Gibson 2021. Used with permission of the author and Caitlin Press.

Kuldip Gill, “At our Punjabi Market” from A Verse Map of Vancouver, edited by George McWhirter, Anvil Press, 2009. Copyright © 2009 by Kuldip Gill. Used with permission of her family and estate.

E. Pauline Johnson, “Lost Lagoon” from Legends of Vancouver, David Spencer Limited, 1911. Copyright © Pauline Johnson 1911. Reprinted in Flint and Feather: The Complete Poems of E. Pauline Johnson (Tekahionwake), Leopold Classic Library, 2016.

Joy Kogawa, “What Do I Remember of the Evacuation” from the graphic poetry book, What Do I Remember of the Evacuation, Scholastic Education Canada, 1985 and A Garden of Anchors, Mosaic Publishers, 2003. Copyright © 1985 by Joy Kogawa. Used with permission of the author.

Alex Leslie, “Postcard Home from English Bay” from Vancouver for Beginners, Book*hug Press, 2019. Copyright © 2019 by Alex Leslie. Used with permission from Book*hug Press.

Debra Sparrow, “Know Who You Are and Know Where You Come From” from A Hurricane in the Basement and Other Vancouver Experiences, Portrait V2K, The City of Vancouver Millenium Project, Vancouver, 2000. Copyright © 2000 by Debra Sparrow. Used with permission of the author.

Rita Wong, “take a st. and” from A Verse Map of Vancouver, edited by George McWhirter, Anvil Press 2009. Revised and reprinted in undercurrent, Nightwood Editions 2015. Copyright © 2009 by Rita Wong. Used with permission of the author.

There were numerous organizations that collaborated with me on various parts of the City Poems Project, including the Asian Canadian Writers’ Workshop, the Centre for Digital Media, the Chinatown Storytelling Centre, the Chinese Canadian Museum, the Downtown Eastside Writers Collective, Dr. Sun Yat Sen Garden, Emily Carr University of Art & Design, grunt gallery, Heritage Vancouver, Mount Pleasant Community Arts Screen, Pandora’s Writing Collective, Rice-paper Magazine, the School of Interactive Arts & Technology (SFU), Tecumseh Elementary School, the CEDaR team and the Institute for Critical Indigenous Studies at UBC, the Vancouver Heritage Foundation, and Word Vancouver.

Besides the numerous poets, judges, instructors, and poetry filmmakers involved and mentioned earlier, I also wish to acknowledge many individuals for their assistance, encouragement, participation or support during various stages of the City Poems Project: John Atkin, Jill Baird, Andrew Battershill, Holly Broadland, Sharon Brown, Christina de Castell, Dante Cerron, Doran Chandler, Lilith Charlet, Andrew Chesham, Olivia Chen, Allan Cho, Angela Mairead Coid, Marion Elizabeth Collins, Shannon Cowan, Gilles Cyrenne, Chelsee Damen, Alyssa de Jesus, Leena Desai, Bruno Dias, Polly Dobie, Phinder Dulai, El Mashup Collective, Kate Sian Foreman-Ng, Margaret Gallagher, Gary Geddes, Chantal Gibson, Tessa Griffin, Lydia Guo, Olenna Hardie, Mary Frances Hill, Glen Hodges, Holly Hofman, Miko Hoffman, Leslie Hurtig, June Hutton, Alger Ji-Liang, Thomas Aaron Larson, Evelyn Lau, D.P. Lee, Sylvia Leung, Ryan Macleod, Ramona Mar, Lisa Marr, Patricia Massy, Greg McLeod, George McWhirter, Ann-Marie Metten, Jonna Milledge, Claire Mulligan, Matt Mullins, Cecily Nicholson, Bonnie Nish, Wendy Oberlander, Shannon O’Connor, Susan Olding, John Patterson, Tilia Prior, Jessica Quan, Claire Queree, Amber Ritchie, January Rogers, Rachel Rose, Kelly Sabo and the family of deceased poet Kuldip Gill, Loretta Seto, Nina Shoroplova, Jane Silcott, Mo Simpson, Michael V. Smith, Kevin Spent, Cathy Stonehouse, Peggy Thompson, Henry Tsang, Mauro Vescera, Shannon Walsh, Joyce Wan, Analee Weinberger, RC Weslowski, Rita Wong, Dorothy Woodend, Henry Yu, and Bill Yuen.

A big shout-out to Blaine Kylo for his experienced eye, graphic design expertise, and assistance with the publication of this final report.

Vancouver City Poems 2022-2024

A very special thank you to my sister, Shona Lam, whose invaluable ongoing administrative and website support was crucial for the City Poems Project to come to fruition, including the all-important set-up for submissions to both the poetry contest and the poetry video contest. Thank you to family members Ted, Robbie, Bruce, Linda, and Vern who had to put up with my intense schedule and workload (and their spillover effects) over the past three years.

Finally, I want to express my profound gratitude to the Musqueam, Squamish and Tsleil-Waututh peoples whose unceded, ancestral lands have provided me with a home and a place within which to grow, learn, work, and flourish.

Here are the exciting results of the innovative, collaborative City Poems Project initiated by Vancouver's sixth poet laureate to stimulate public engagement in poetry about local historical, cultural and ecological sites within the unceded, ancestral territory of the Musqueam, Squamish and Tsleil-Waututh peoples that we now know as Vancouver.

Winning poems from the city-wide contest are showcased, along with poems from other well-known local published poets. Read about the award-winning videos made by student teams based on the poems. Find out about promising next steps, including the development of a geolocative app.

City Poems is a launching pad for future collaborations, integrating the distilled language of poetry and the visual impact of film and video.

9 781777 251215