

Renting in Vancouver? Know your rights.

All renters in B.C. are protected by provincial tenancy laws. If you rent in Vancouver and are facing eviction due to redevelopment or renovation, you could be entitled to extra protections from the City.

We're being told we need to move out

A developer bought our rental building

I'm being offered money to move out of my rental

Renters who need to move because their home is being redeveloped or renovated may be eligible for support and protection under the City's Tenant Relocation and Protection Policy, including:

- help finding new housing and moving
- financial compensation
- additional support for tenants with low incomes or facing extra barriers
- choice to move back into the new building at discounted rents

These protections apply city-wide, with extra supports in specific areas.

Find answers, get support and learn more about your rights.

vancouver.ca/protecting-tenants trp@vancouver.ca
604-673-8001

Our rental home was just sold

We've been told to move out because of renovations

